Lunatic.—The provisions of stat. 16 & 17 Vict. c. 96, s. 9, do not apply to persons whose care or charge of a lunatic is purely of a domestic character; and therefore where a husband, living with a lunatic wife, was convicted upon an indictment for ill-treating the lunatic, the conviction was quashed. (Reg. v. Rundle, 1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 430).

Maliciously cutting Trees.—Upon an indictment under the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 38, for maliciously damaging growing trees, and doing injury to an amount exceeding 5*l.*, it was proved that the actual injury to the trees amounted to only 1*l.*, but that the repairs to the hedge in which they stood would bring up the amount to over 5*l.* The latter being only consequential damage, the Court held that the indictment was not supported. (Reg. v. Whiteman and Another, 18 Jur., part 1, p. 434).

Practice.—It is no ground for arrest of judgment after conviction for a felony, that the indictment also contains a count for a misdemeanour. (Reg. v. Ferguson, 1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 73).

Some useful practice points have been decided in Reg. v. Larkin, (18 Jur., part 1, p. 539). A count for receiving stolen goods alleged that the prisoner received the goods of A. B., "he, the said A. B., then knowing them to have been stolen;" and it was held that the count was bad; that the objection was properly taken by motion in arrest of judgment after verdict; that the indictment was not amendable after verdict; and the amendment having been made by the Court below, the Court of Criminal Appeal ordered the record to be restored to its original state, and quashed the conviction. The Court expressed an opinion that the prisoner might be indicted again for the receiving, though not for the stealing. Alderson, B., reprobated the practice of setting out all the preliminary proceedings not material to the real questions to be raised. He suggested that the cases should be settled by the counsel.

The power of amendment under the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, was again brought under the consideration of the Court in Reg. v. Frost and Another, (1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 406). The prosecutor was described as "George William Frederick Charles Duke of Cambridge." It was proved that "George William" were two of the duke's Christian names, and that he had other names, but of these there was no evidence. The sessions refused to amend by striking out the words "Frederick Charles;" and it was held—First, that the power of amendment given by the stat. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, is entirely in the discretion of the judge at the trial, and that such power should be exercised before the case goes to the jury. The Court of Appeal could not, therefore, say that the sessions were bound to amend. Secondly, that the sessions were right in refusing to strike out the words "Frederick Charles," but might have amended by striking out all the Christian names. Lastly, that as the indictment stood it contained matter of description which ought to have been proved, and as it was not, an acquittal should have been directed. Lord Cardigan's case (Dom. Proc., 1841) was considered in point.

An indictment charged, that "being able, and having the means," the prisoner neglected to support her child. There was no evidence that she had the means of doing it, but it was proved that she might have applied to the relieving officer, who would have provided the means. Conviction quashed, upon the ground that the allegation in the indictment was not proved. (Reg. v. Chandler, 1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 429).

We have two decisions upon the reception in evidence of the depositions of an absent or dead witness, under the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 17. In the first, (Reg. v. Wicker, 18 Jur., part 1, p. 252), Channell, Serjt., after consulting Parke, B., ruled at Nisi Prius, that the deposition of a witness might be read who had come to the assize town, and into the building where the Court was sitting, but before the trial came on returned home by the advice of a medical man, who deposed that it would have been highly dangerous for the witness to remain. While the trial was going on, the witness was travelling home. The construction thus put upon the words "unable to travel" is, not able to travel to the place at and in which the witness is to give evidence. In Reg. v. Beeson (18 Jur., part 1, p. 1058) the prisoner was committed upon a charge of feloniously wounding A. A. died, and it was held that A.'s deposition, taken before the committing magistrate, was properly received in evidence upon a trial for the murder. The admissibility of such evidence depends upon whether or not the prisoner, when before the magistrate, had a full opportunity for cross-examining the witness, and it is not necessary that the two charges should be identically the same. The deposition would have been good evidence before the statute, which makes no alteration in this respect.

If one prisoner calls a witness whose evidence tends to criminate a fellow-prisoner, the counsel of the latter has a right to cross-examine the witness, and address the jury upon his evidence. (Reg. v. Luck and Others, 1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 119).

Upon an indictment for uttering a counterfeit half-crown, evidence of a subsequent uttering of a counterfeit shilling is admissible to prove guilty knowledge. (Reg. v. Foster, 1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 407).

Rape.—The prisoner had connexion with a married woman, she supposing he was her husband. It was held, upon the authority of Res v. Jackson, (Russ. & R. C. C. 487), that this did not amount to rape. (Reg. v. Clarke, 18 Jur., part 1, p. 1059).

Receiving Stolen Goods.—Stolen goods were taken from the thief and restored to the owner, who then returned them to the thief, and sent him to dispose of them where he had sold others. The thief went to D. and sold the articles to him. A conviction against D. for receiving was quashed. (Reg. v. Dolan, 1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 72). In the above case Reg. v. Lyons (Car. & M. 217) was cited, but the learned judges thought that case could not be supported.

To constitute a felonious receipt of stolen goods, manual possession is not necessary, but it is sufficient if the goods are under the control of the person charged with the knowledge that they have been stolen. Upon an indictment for receiving a watch, the jury were told that if they believed the prisoner knew the watch had been stolen, and that if they believed it was in the custody of a person with the cognisance of the prisoner, that person being one over whom the prisoner had absolute control, or that the watch would be forthcoming if the prisoner ordered it, this direction was held to be quite proper. (Reg. v. Smith, 1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 575).

Stealing from the Person.—In Reg. v. Simpson (18 Jur., part 1, p. 1030) we have a decision upon what is a sufficient severance to maintain a conviction for stealing from the person. The prisoner by force drew the chain of a watch out of a waistcoat button-hole, but the watch key having been caught by another button, the watch and chain remained suspended. This was likened to Lapier's case, (1 Leach's C. C. 320), in which an earring was snatched at in a lady's ear, and separated from the ear, but was found amongst her curls; and it was held that the severance, although momentary, was sufficient to constitute the offence. The Court differed from the view taken by a majority of the judges in Thompson's case, (1 Moo. C. C. 78): there a book was drawn about an inch above the top of the inside pocket of the prosecutor's coat, and a majority of the judges held that it was not a sufficient asportation of the book to amount to a conviction for stealing from the person.

FIRST REPORT OF THE COUNTY COURTS COMMISSION.

(to the Suits' Fund).

If money which has been paid into court to the use of any suitor has remained unclaimed for six years, it becomes applicable to the same purposes as the general fund of the court.

V.—FEES.

The fees taken in respect of proceedings in the county courts may be divided into five classes:—

1. Those in respect of specific proceedings taken on the part of suitors, as on the summons, hearing, and other steps in the cause.
2. The general fund, which is taken on entering the plaint, and which is proportioned to the amount sought to be recovered.
3. Fees which are payable in respect of appraisements on executions.
4. Fees payable in respect of distraining for rent.
5. Fees payable in insolvency and protection cases.

Judge's Fees, &c.

1. The first class of fees was appointed by an order of a Secretary of State, dated the 15th November, 1850, sanctioned by the Commissioners of the Treasury, in pursuance of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 37. A table of these fees, printed in large letters, is hung up in a conspicuous place in every clerk's office and county court, so that an immediate check on any attempt at overcharge is secured to every suitor desirous of taking any proceeding in the court. A table of these fees is subjoined.

TABLE OF FEES to be taken in the County Courts established by the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, on and after the 25th November, 1850.

N. B.—In cases within the ordinary jurisdiction of the courts, the under-mentioned poundage and fees are to be taken; but where the sum demanded is above 20*l.*, the poundage is to be taken on 20*l.* only. All fractions of a pound, for the purpose of calculating the poundage, shall be treated as an entire pound.

For every summons, 7*d.* in the pound on the amount of the demand.

For every application for a summons out of the district, 3*d.* in the pound on the amount of the demand. This sum to include every fee for such application.

Notice.—No other fee whatever is to be taken on the entry of a plaint, except for service by the high bailiff, and for affidavit of service out of the district.

For every hearing without a jury, 2*s.* 2*d.* in the pound on the amount of the demand.

For every hearing with a jury, 3*s.* 2*d.* in the pound on the amount of the demand.

Judgments by consent under the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, ss. 8, 9, and judgments upon applications in the nature of sci. fa., to be charged the same fee as on the hearing of a cause without a jury.

Notice.—No other fee whatever is to be taken for the hearing or trial of a cause, except for the service of the order for the high bailiff.

For every subpoena, (each witness), 2*s.*, without reference to the amount of the demand.

For entering and giving notice of a special defence,

1*s.* 6*d.*, without reference to the amount of the demand.

For any adjournment of a cause or other matter to another court, at the request of either party, 3*d.* in the pound on the amount of the demand.

For paying money into or out of court, whether before or after judgment, on each payment not exceeding 10*s.*, 1*d.*; and on each payment above 10*s.*, 2*d.* in the pound on the amount of the payment.

For notice to be given, by prepaid post letter, to plaintiff, of every payment whatever made into court, 2*d.*, without reference to the amount of the payment. Out of this fee the postage of such letter is to be paid by the clerk.

For issuing any warrant, attachment, or execution, 2*d.* in the pound on the amount for which such warrant, attachment, or execution issues.

For taking recognisance, bond, or security for costs, 4*d.* in the pound on the amount of the demand.

For inquiring into sufficiency of sureties, 6*d.* in the pound on the amount of the demand.

For application for new trial, or to set aside proceedings, 6*d.* in the pound on the amount of the demand.

For every summons for commitment under the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 98, 6*d.* in the pound on the amount of the original demand then remaining due.

For every hearing of the matters mentioned in such summons for commitment, 1*s.* in the pound on the amount last aforesaid.

Notice.—No other fees than the above to be taken on any account whatever, except the high bailiff's fees for service. No application to the court is to be charged with a fee except those above mentioned. No increase of fees shall be made by reason of there being more than one plaintiff or defendant.

High Bailiff's Fees.

For serving every summons, order, or subpoena, within two miles of the court house, 1*d.* in the pound on the amount of the demand, except for the service of a summons under the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 98, when the poundage is to be calculated on the amount of the original demand then remaining due.

For such service, if beyond two miles, then extra for every additional mile, 6*d.*, without reference to the amount of the demand.

For affidavit of service of summons out of the jurisdiction, 1*s.*, without reference to the amount of the demand.

For execution of every warrant or attachment against the goods or body within two miles of the court house, 1*s.* in the pound on the amount for which such warrant or attachment issues.

For such execution, if beyond two miles, then extra for every additional mile, 6*d.*, without reference to the amount for which such warrant or attachment issues.

For keeping possession of goods till sale, per day, (including expenses of removal, storage of goods, and all other expenses whatever), not exceeding five days, 6*d.* in the pound on the amount for which the execution issues. [This, however, does not apply to cases of interpleader, in which the costs and expenses of possession are in the discretion of the judge.]

For carrying every delinquent to prison, including all expenses and assistants, 1*s.* per mile, without reference to the amount mentioned in the warrant.

For issuing warrant to clerk of another court, 2*s.* 6*d.*, without reference to the amount mentioned in the warrant.

N. B.—Where the plaintiff recovers less than the amount of his claim, so as to reduce the scale of costs, the plaintiff to pay the difference.

The several fees payable on proceedings in replevin to be regulated on the above scale by the amount distrained for, and on proceedings for the recovery of tenements by the yearly rent or value of the tenement sought to be recovered; but in neither case to exceed the fees payable on a demand of 20*l*.

In cases of extraordinary jurisdiction, given to the court by the consent of parties to the trial of questions under the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, s. 17, the poundage shall be taken in every such case on the sum of 50*l*.

In cases of interpleader the summons is to be issued to the high bailiff gratis, and the poundage for the hearing is to be estimated on the value of the goods claimed, which, in case of dispute, is to be assessed by the judge. The costs, however, of the summons, estimated on the above-mentioned value, shall be included in the general costs, which may, in the discretion of the judge, be awarded at the hearing.

These fees are taken under the authority of an order made by a Secretary of State and two Commissioners of the Treasury on the 15th November, 1850.

2. The General Fund.—This fee is taken under the authority of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 96, s. 52, which authorised the clerk of every court to demand on every plaint where the claim exceeded 20*l*., but did not exceed 40*l*., 6*d*., and where it exceeded 40*l*., 1*s*. in the pound. It will therefore be observed that the fee to the general fund was not made payable on any sum not exceeding 20*l*.. A power, however, was reserved to diminish, though not to increase, the amount of the above fees, at the discretion of a Secretary of State, with the consent of the Commissioners of the Treasury; that power was in November, 1850, exercised, and the fee of 1*s*. in the pound was reduced to 8*d*.. The other fee of 6*d*. in the pound, in sums between 20*l*. and 40*l*., was not interfered with. The fee for the general fund now received in the county courts remains as altered in the manner described. The object of this fee is to raise a fund for certain purposes, which will be explained under the head of "Application of Revenue."

3. Appraisements.—The fees payable in respect of appraisements are taken in pursuance of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 96, s. 106. Those fees consist of 6*d*. in the pound on the value of the goods appraised, besides the stamp duty, and 1*s*. in the pound on the net produce of the sale for advertisements, catalogues, sale commission, and delivery of goods.

4. Distresses.—The fees payable in respect of distresses for rent are taken in pursuance of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 96, s. 107. They are payable in cases where, the high bailiff having seized, and notice is received by him from the landlord that rent is in arrear, he is bound to distrain for a certain amount of the rent in arrear proportionate to the rent reserved. He is then entitled to receive, as the costs of the distress, such fees as are authorised by the 57 Geo. 3, c. 93, intituled "An Act to regulate the Costs of Distresses levied for Payment of Small Rents."

5. Insolvency and Protection.—The fees payable on proceedings in insolvency and protection cases are taken in conformity with the subjoined scales, which were issued under the sanction of a Secretary of State and two Commissioners of the Treasury on the 8th July, 1851.

VI.—COSTS.

We shall now state the rule prevailing with respect to costs as distinguished from fees of court.

It is to be observed that no scale of costs as between attorney and client, except in the particular instances hereafter mentioned, exists in the county courts. Any claim, with those exceptions, which an attorney has against his client for services rendered, must be taxed on the scale of some other court.

As between party and party, costs of counsel or attorney previous to the hearing are not allowed in any case. Costs of counsel or attorney on the hearing can only be allowed by order of the judge. Costs of witnesses and other expenses are also entirely in the discretion of the judge, but in default of any special direction to the contrary, they abide the event of the action. (See ante, p. 216).

The costs allowed are divided into four classes—first, of counsel; second, of attorney; third, of witnesses; fourth, of other expenses.

Counsel.—In general, the amount of the claim determines the amount of the fee to counsel: thus, when the claim does not exceed 5*l.*, a fee to counsel cannot be allowed against the opposite party, though it seems it may against the client; where the claim exceeds 5*l.*, but does not exceed 20*l.*, a fee of 1*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.* only can be allowed; where the claim exceeds 20*l.*, but does not exceed 50*l.*, a fee of 2*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.* only can be allowed; where it exceeds 50*l.*, and in other cases under the consent clause, no scale exists.

Attorney.—Fees to the attorney vary with the amount of the claim sought to be recovered. Where the claim does not exceed 40*s.*, the attorney cannot recover costs from any one; where it exceeds 40*s.*, but does not exceed 5*l.*, he can only recover from his own client 10*s.*, and nothing from the opposite party; when it does exceed 5*l.*, but does not exceed 20*l.*, his costs may be allowed to the amount of 15*s.*; where the demand in any plaint in covenant, debt, detinue, or assumpsit exceeds 20*l.*, but does not exceed 35*l.*, he may be allowed 1*l.* 10*s.*; and where the demand exceeds 35*l.*, but does not exceed 50*l.*, he may be allowed 2*l.*

Lay Advocates.—A person other than an attorney who is allowed by the judge to appear for either party is not allowed to recover any remuneration for his services.

In demands exceeding 50*l.*, or other cases within the jurisdiction by consent, no scale of professional fees has been established.

Witnesses.—The allowance for the attendance of witnesses is fixed by a schedule attached to the rules of court, and which is subject to the discretion of the judge; but the amounts there allowed are in no case to be exceeded.

The following is the scale contained in the schedule:—

	PER DAY.	s. d.
Gentlemen, merchants, bankers, and professional men ...	7	6
Tradesmen, auctioneers, accountants, clerks, and yeomen ...	5	0
Journeymen, labourers, and the like ...	2	0
Travelling expenses, per mile, one way ...	0	6

Other Expenses.—Fees of court paid by the successful party, in order to support his claim or defence, become costs in the cause.

VII.—ACCOUNTS.

We now proceed to state the manner in which the accounts of the courts are kept.

The clerk of each court is furnished with a certain number of books by the Treasury, and which are eight in number. They consist of the plaint book, minute book, execution and commitment book, foreign execution and commitment book, foreign execution book, cash book, fee book, and ledger.

These books are so arranged as to operate both as a record of the proceedings of the court, and a debtor and creditor account of all the receipts, whether of fees or other monies, which come to the hands of the clerk, and of all disbursements made by him. These books operate as a check, so as to render it difficult, if not impossible, for any misappropriation to escape detection. With respect to disbursements, as proper vouchers must be produced to the treasurer at his audit, any defalcation is readily discovered.

VIII.—REVENUE.

In the year 1853 the total revenue of the courts, independent of the third and fourth classes of fees, and the fees in insolvency and protection cases, amounted to 258,518*l.* This sum was produced by the fees mentioned in the first and second classes, which were levied on the suitors of the courts.

With respect to the revenue arising from the third, fourth, and fifth classes, as those fees are very uncertain in amount, and are not accounted for by the persons receiving them, no return of them could conveniently be procured.

IX.—APPLICATION OF REVENUE.

The purposes to which the above revenue is applied are the following:—

Fees.—The total amount produced by the fees, irrespective of the general fund fee and the fees under the title of high bailiffs' fees, is divided into forty parts. Nineteen fortieths are appropriated to the fund out of which the judges and their travelling expenses are paid; nineteen fortieths are appropriated to the use of the clerks; and two fortieths to the use of the high bailiffs. On examining the average for several years antecedent to making the above scale of fees, it was ascertained that the amount of judge's fees was nearly or exactly equal to that of the clerk's fees, and that the fees to the high bailiff, which by the new scale were abolished, for the duties performed by him in court, amounted to about one twentieth of the total of fees produced by proceedings in court. The reason for the division of the fund into fortieths instead of twentieths was, that if such a division as the latter were adopted, a proper share could not conveniently be appropriated to the different claimants upon it.

General Fund.—With respect to the produce of the general fund fee, the amount produced in the courts is devoted to the purposes appointed by law; that is to say, to provide court houses and offices, and the general expenses of the courts.

High Bailiffs' Fees.—The fees under the title of high bailiffs' fees are retained by the high bailiffs themselves. The fees belonging to the third and fourth classes are retained by the appraiser or the high bailiff, as the case may be, and the fees in insolvency and protection cases are retained by the clerks and high bailiffs.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

JURISDICTION.

We now proceed to state our opinions and recommendations concerning the matters referred to us by your Majesty's commission, and it will be convenient to commence with the subject of jurisdiction, as being that on which the other matters embraced in our report must mainly depend.

Legal Jurisdiction.

The jurisdiction to which our present report will be confined is that in respect of legal claims, leaving questions as to other branches of jurisdiction to be hereafter considered.

Comparison of County Court Procedure with that of the Superior Courts.—In examining the subject of jurisdiction, we have been necessarily led to compare the procedure in the superior courts with that established in the county courts. The result of that comparison may be shortly stated.

Superior Courts.—In the former, the means adopted for separating questions of law from those of fact, the exertions of skilled advocates accustomed to practise in the central tribunals of the country, the attendance of a learned and enlightened Bar, in whose presence each judge is required to fulfil the functions of his office, the facility for reviewing his opinion and direction, and for appealing from the decision of the full court, are calculated to insure the satisfactory administration of justice. On the other hand, considerable delay and expense necessarily result from bringing the machinery of those courts into full activity.

County Courts.—In the county courts, the absence of any pre-appointed means of separating questions of law from those of fact, the non-employment generally of legal advocates, the non-attendance of a Bar, the rapidity of the proceedings, and the power of the judge finally to decide on all questions of law and fact, except where the claim exceeds 20*l.* in amount, render the judgment of the court less secure against miscarriage. On the other hand, the county court is near to the residence of the suitors, and the proceedings are simple, cheap, speedy, and final.

Claims of considerable Amount best decided in Superior Courts.—In claims of considerable amount, we are of opinion that the inconveniences incident to the administration of justice in the superior courts are counterbalanced by the greater certainty in the application of the rules of law than can be expected in a tribunal so constituted as the county court.

Small Claims beneficially decided in County Court.—In claims of small amount we think that the evils caused by an occasional miscarriage are more than counterbalanced by the advantages presented by a local tribunal, the proceedings of which are simple, cheap, speedy, and final.

"Small" Claims defined.—It may perhaps be difficult satisfactorily to define the word "small," as it is a word of relation, but we think it may be conveniently treated, for the purposes of jurisdiction, as embracing claims not exceeding 20*l.*

In former Class of Claims, Consent, express or implied, should be required to give Jurisdiction to County Court.—With regard to claims exceeding 20*l.*, but not exceeding 50*l.* in amount, we think the jurisdiction should remain concurrent as at present, but that such claims should be subject to removal by the defendant on certain conditions hereafter specified; and we are of opinion that claims of a greater amount, or such as involve questions otherwise excluded from the jurisdiction, should be decided by the county courts only where consent has been given for that purpose by both parties, or a superior tribunal has directed the matter to be disposed of in the county court.

Powers to be increased without organic Change.—We think that the powers and procedure of the court should be increased and improved, without making any organic change in its constitution, so as to render it as efficient as the nature of the tribunal will permit.

Division of Subject.—We propose to divide our recommendations on the subject of jurisdiction into two parts—first, with reference to increasing the present jurisdiction of the courts; secondly, with reference to the introduction of additional securities for the due exercise of that jurisdiction.

I.—WITH REFERENCE TO INCREASING THE PRESENT JURISDICTION OF THE COURTS.

We will first consider the jurisdiction of the court, so far as it extends to claims not exceeding 5*l.* in tort, and 20*l.* in contract, and which may be treated, except in certain cases, as its exclusive jurisdiction. Secondly, the jurisdiction in tort, where the claim exceeds 5*l.*, but does not exceed 50*l.*, and in contract, where it exceeds 20*l.*, but does not exceed 50*l.*, which is its principal jurisdiction concurrent with that of the superior courts. Thirdly, the jurisdiction in claims beyond that amount, and in certain otherwise excluded questions, which is the jurisdiction by consent.

Exclusive Jurisdiction.

County Court originally intended to be a Small Debts Court—Experiment successful.—First, then, as to that which may be treated as the exclusive jurisdiction of the court, in consequence of the penalty by deprivation of costs in the superior court, should the plaintiff not recover a sum to the amount of 20*l.* or 5*l.*, according to the nature of the claim. The object which the Legislature had in view when it established the county court evidently was, to secure to the public the benefit of a local tribunal, in which claims of a moderate amount, and not complicated in their nature, might be enforced with cheapness and rapidity. During the seven years which have elapsed since the establishment of the courts, the experiment has been eminently successful, and benefits have been conferred on the community by means of those courts which it is perhaps difficult to exaggerate. Honest claims have been enforced, and injuries have been redressed, which the expense, distance, and delay incident to the proceedings of the superior courts placed in effect beyond the power of the law. Facility to enforce rights has checked the commission of wrongs, and thus a more desirable state of credit and morality has been produced.

Jurisdiction might be extended—Malicious Prosecution.—The consideration which we have bestowed upon the subject has not induced us to recommend any considerable extension of the jurisdiction of the court. We think, however, that as actions for false imprisonment are now within the jurisdiction, actions for malicious prosecution might be properly brought within it.

Matters of Title by Consent, with certain Modifications.—We also recommend that the proviso contained in sect. 58 of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, by which certain questions of title are excluded from the jurisdiction of the court, should continue in force, unless both parties should at the trial consent to the judge deciding the question in dispute. We think that such a jurisdiction might be beneficially conferred by the consent of both parties, where the question arises incidentally to the claim which it is the immediate object of the action to enforce. Thus, an action may be brought for the value of a tree which it is alleged that the defendant has wrongfully cut down. The defence may be, that the tree was growing on the defendant's own land. The question of title to the freehold then becomes a question incidentally arising in the cause, but which must be decided in order to dispose of the claim. Again: in an action for rent, if the tenancy under the plaintiff be denied, a question of title to the tenement may arise. Both parties may be quite willing that the judge of the county court should decide between them, but, as the law now stands, the judge has no power to do so, and consent would not confer jurisdiction for this purpose.

We recommend, therefore, that if both parties are willing to have the case decided by the county court judge, an entry to that effect should be made on the minutes of the court, and then that the judgment should be binding on the parties, so far as the immediate question in dispute is concerned, but should not be evidence of title between the parties or persons claiming by, through, or under them in any other proceeding. The parties might thus have the benefit of a proceeding similar to that of a reference to an arbitrator, and obtain an immediate decision at a small expense, instead of being forced to proceed in a superior court, at an expense and with an amount of inconvenience far exceeding the value of the matter in dispute; and by the provision which we recommend on the subject of evidence, future rights or ulterior proceedings would not be compromised.

It will be observed, that we do not recommend that jurisdiction should be conferred in such cases where the immediate object of the action is to recover something which the proviso enacts shall not be within the jurisdiction of the court; as, for instance, an action for tolls, or an action for the recovery of a tenement not within the meaning of sect. 122.

Costs on Judgment by Default in Superior Court not to be allowed.—The present law as to costs in the superior court, so far as it affects jurisdiction, should, we think, remain unaltered, with the exception, that where an action is brought in the superior court on a contract to recover a less sum than 20*l.*, and the defendant suffers judgment by default, the plaintiff should recover no costs, unless, upon application, a judge of a superior court should otherwise direct.

Subject to Exceptions.—This deprivation of costs, however, we propose should be subject to the exceptions contained in sect. 128 of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, where the parties reside more than twenty miles apart, or the other circumstances contemplated by the section exist.

Concurrent Jurisdiction.

Secondly, we will consider the concurrent jurisdiction where the amount of the claim exceeds 5*l.* in tort, and 20*l.* in contract, but does not exceed 50*l.* In those cases the choice of tribunal between the superior court and the county court is vested in the plaintiff. This jurisdiction as to claims above 20*l.* was first conferred on the county court in the month of August, 1850, and has been exercised to a very considerable extent, as no less than 39,580 plaintiffs, both in tort and contract, ranging in amount between 20*l.* and 50*l.* inclusive, have been entered in the county courts between the time of passing the act and the 31st December, 1853; and of these 22,968 have been tried.

It may be useful to state the number of such plaintiffs which have been entered and disposed of in each year respectively since the passing of the Extension Act, 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61.

In 1850 there were 4297 plaintiffs entered, and 2436 causes tried; in 1851 there were 13,446 plaintiffs entered, and 8236 causes tried; in 1852 there were 12,567 plaintiffs entered, and 7020 causes tried; and in 1853 there were 9270 plaintiffs entered, and 5276 causes tried.

Defendant's implied Assent required to give Jurisdiction in such Cases.—We are of opinion that in such cases the defendant should have an opportunity of expressing his dissent from the plaintiff's choice of tribunal. We see no objection to the plaintiff being permitted, as at present, to exercise his option in the first instance, for he must in all cases initiate the proceedings; but the defendant, if not disposed to try the cause before the county court, ought to be permitted to try in the superior court, without assigning any reason, on giving satisfactory proof that his objection is not for the purpose of delay. For this purpose he should be required to give, in the county court, security for the amount claimed, and costs in the superior court, or to make a deposit to the like amount, not exceeding in the whole 150*l.*, the costs in the court below being treated as costs in the cause. The plaintiff might then be transmitted to such one of the superior courts as the plaintiff should direct. If, however, the defendant do not declare his dissent, and comply with the condition above mentioned, within such time as shall be fixed by the practice of the court, he must be taken to assent to the cause being tried by the county court, and that tribunal may then dispose of the cause in the usual way.

This right of removal we intend to be in addition to the power to remove already existing by law in such cases.

Balance on Allowance of Set-off recoverable in County Court.—We are further of opinion, that if the sum claimed be a balance alleged to be due not exceeding 50*l.*, after making allowance for a set-off, if the claim and counter-claim do not respectively exceed 200*l.*, the case ought to be within the concurrent jurisdiction.

*Where Claim in Superior Court reduced to 50*l.* by Set-off, &c., Case may be referred to County Court.*—We also think that the concurrent jurisdiction may be rendered beneficially available by extending it to actions of malicious prosecution, and by enabling a judge, where, in an action brought in the superior court, it appears that a sum not exceeding 50*l.* is claimed in an action of contract, or that the claim is reduced, by set-off, payment, or otherwise, to a sum not exceeding 50*l.*, to direct, on the application of either party, and on such terms as he shall think fit, that the cause shall be heard in a county court.

Questions of Title decided by Consent.—Our recommendations with reference to deciding questions of title by consent, where the amount in dispute does not exceed 20*l.*, extend to cases where the claim exceeds 20*l.* and does not exceed 50*l.*

Jurisdiction by Consent.

Thirdly, with reference to the jurisdiction by consent. (See ante, pp. 181, 238). This power was conferred on the court by the 17th section of the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61.

Parties to be permitted to refer any Question within the Jurisdiction of Courts of Common Law, except Actions for Criminal Conversation.—The principle of the section now under consideration is to permit parties, if so inclined, to refer to the county court judge as to an arbitrator; and we are of opinion that the principle should be applicable not merely to the matters enumerated in the above section, but should be extended to all questions, whether of law or fact, in which the courts of common law have jurisdiction, except claims for damages in respect of alleged criminal conversation. We think that claims of the latter description ought not to be made the subject of a proceeding by consent, as such a proceeding might be mischievously used, with the ulterior object of obtaining a divorce, in which the interests of the wife might in her absence be collusively sacrificed.

Mode of Consent to be retained.—We think, however, that the provisions of the statute as to the mode in which the consent of parties is required to be given should continue.

Ejectment.

We have already referred, in our statement of the jurisdiction, (ante, p. 180), to the power with which the county court is invested in certain cases to restore possession of tenements where the annual rent or value does not exceed 50*l.*, and no fine has been paid.

ADVANTAGES TO THE ASSURED.

1. Four-fifths of the Profits are divided triennially amongst the Assured.

In some Offices the Assured may not be entitled to a Bonus until the expiration of ten years from the time of effecting the Policy, whilst in this Office three years is the utmost limit.

2. At the first division of Profits in May, 1853, a Reversionary Bonus, averaging 451. per cent., was declared on all Participating Policies. In some cases the Bonus exceeded 611. per cent. on the premiums paid.

On reference to the Prospectuses of some of the principal Offices, it will be found that the Bonus on their first division was much less, viz. 291. per cent.

3. The next division of Profits will be declared in May, 1856, when all Policies effected in 1855 will participate.

In most Offices Assureds do not participate in the Profits until after payment of from three to five annual premiums, but in this Office they may participate on payment of a single premium.

ADVANTAGES TO THE PROFESSION.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JULY 7, 1855.

THE "uncertainty of the law" is not entirely chargeable upon the lawyers, who, though not exempt from human infirmities, do their work, on the whole, as well as the members of any other liberal profession do theirs, if not better. We think better—not, if we know ourselves, from any bias to our own class, but for the sufficient reason, that every lawyer lives in a glass house, exposed to the scrutiny of every other member of his class. He turns out no piece of work, even in chamber practice, that may not within a month be subjected to the jealous criticism of the ablest and most practised minds in the Profession. From this incessant friction of wits, and from the magnitude of the rewards which are held out to intellect and industry, as well as from the nature of the subject-matter, it follows that the practice of the law is carried on with a greater habitual expenditure of intellectual power than any other profession or art. The daily studies and mental labours of a clergyman, a physician, or an architect are, in ordinary cases, mere child's play in comparison with those of an advising lawyer in full practice. The result is not altogether incommensurate with the means. The law is a very scientific, and, in proportion as it is scientific, a certain, art, and the uncertainty with which it is charged much more frequently exists in the materials submitted to the law than in the law itself, or the method of its application. So long as men will enter into contracts and make wills without taking the trouble, if they have the capacity, to view the subject-matter in all its bearings, and to provide for all contingencies, to conceive clearly, and to express their conceptions completely, the construction of a contract or a will in a court of justice, according to the actual intention, if intention there was with respect to the event, or the presumable intention if the event was unprovided for, will frequently be an insoluble problem, and the decision in such cases must be either questionable, or, if right on general grounds, wrong in the particular case. Occasionally, however, judges will go wrong, and their errors, instead of being corrected, will sometimes be adopted and amplified by their successors. The subject of the interpretation of wills is fertile in both kinds of uncertainty—that which is inherent in the subject-matter, and that which has been caused by irrational precedents. The rules of interpretation applicable, before the late Statute of Wills, to bequests of personal estate were, on the whole, rational, because they had grown up from remote antiquity with the progress of the subject itself. But when the stats. 32 and 34 & 35 Hen. 8 had extended the testamentary power to real estate, the judges, being called upon suddenly to establish rules for the interpretation of devises, and not perceiving the full value of the fact, that the devising power was utterly antagonistic to the feudal system, endeavoured, with very indifferent success, to harmonise the two, and adapted to wills some of the rules which governed the construction and operation of conveyances in such a manner as to save neither feudal principles nor common sense. Thus they called the will itself a conveyance, and having so called it, inferred that it could only operate on the real property which the testator possessed at the time of making it, and which he continued without interruption to possess up to the time of his death. They did not perceive, or perceiving did not care, that they thus sacrificed the substantial, and in regard to personal estate, well-recognised character and operation of the testamentary instrument, to a fanciful analogy. One of the absurd consequences of the doctrine was, that almost any suspension or alteration of the testator's estate or interest in the property devised, for whatever purpose, even though the purpose were the confirming of the devise itself, amounted to a revocation of the will*.

* See an elaborate article on this subject, 16 Jur., part 2, pp. 191, 198, 214, 223. The decision in Plowden v. Hyde, there commented on, has been since reversed by the Lords Justices. (Plowden v. Hyde, 16 Jur., part 1, p. 823).

It was principally with a view to this mischievous notion of the constructive revocation of devises that the 24th section of the late Wills Act (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26) was framed. But in enacting "that every will shall be construed, with reference to the real estate and personal estate comprised in it, to speak and take effect as if it had been executed immediately before the death of the testator, unless a contrary effect shall appear by the will," the Legislature has not corrected the judicature in the happiest manner. The clause was in fact wholly superfluous, the business having been effectually done by the 3rd section, which extended the devising power to real estate acquired after the date of the will; (see Cole v. Scott, 1 Mac. & G. 529*); and done again by the 23rd section, which in express terms put an end to the doctrine of Lord Lincoln's case and its satellites. The most unhappy part of the 24th section is the word "speak," which, if it means anything, means that the will is to be interpreted as if, when it was made, the existing state of things was the state of things at the time of the death. The word was probably aimed at the doctrine of the class of cases to which Abney v. Miller (2 Atk. 593) and Coppin v. Ferryhough (2 Bro. C. C. 291) belong—that a bequest of leaseholds by a particular description was revoked by a renewal of the lease. The difficulty was partly inherent in the subject, (for when a testator bequeaths a leasehold interest depending on a term or lives about to drop, it is not a necessary inference that he means to pass any renewed interest which he may subsequently purchase), and partly occasioned by the decisions. To find a testator's meaning, when he has not even attempted to express it, is beyond the power of the Legislature as much as of the judges, and the most that could safely be done was to deprive the old decisions of their authority, leaving the Courts to start afresh. The consequence of the introduction of the word "speak" has been to raise a variety of questions which have not yet been settled, whatever may be the prospect of a rational meaning being ultimately given to the clause. Thus, Mr. Jarman, writing before any question on this section had been decided, said that it would of course extend the operation of a gift of a leasehold or a specific sum of stock to a renewed lease, and to substituted stock afterwards acquired by the testator, of similar amount; and he added, "Suppose that a testator, having a house in Grosvenor-square, bequeaths it by the description of his messuage in such square, and afterwards sells the property, and purchases another house in the same square, of which he is possessed at his decease, the bequest will, it should seem, comprise the new acquisition, by force of the enactment which makes the will speak from the death." So Mr. Hayes says that the act "does not merely enlarge the scope of a general devise or bequest, by bringing down the testator's volition expressed at a former period to the latest moment of his existence, but seems, according to the natural construction, to be capable of giving to a specific devise or bequest an aspect very different from that which it had under the old law, (abstractedly from the technical doctrine which made every devise specific), and to be of force in itself to convert a devise or bequest of one subject, answering the given description at one time, into a devise or bequest of another subject, more or less valuable, answering the same description at another time. Thus, for example, if I devise my farm in the parish of A., having at the date of the will a small farm of fifty acres in the parish of A., and I afterwards sell that farm and purchase another of 1000 acres, and die without having either altered or re-executed my will, the larger farm will pass; though if I were to die possessed of both farms, and if this (like the bequest of 'my white horse,' when I have two white horses) were considered to be a case of ambiguitas latens, admitting of elucidation by extrinsic evidence, but the only evidence adduced were the fact of my having had the smaller farm and not the larger farm at the execution of my will, either the devise must be void for uncertainty, or it must speak and take effect as if not actually executed immediately before my death, thus speaking and taking effect without an intention apparent upon the will itself. So, suppose, that having at the date of my will two farms, one in my own and one in A.'s occupation, I devise 'my farm in A.'s occupation,' and that at my death both farms are in A.'s occupation, is the devise void for uncertainty? Or, as an extrinsic fact creates the difficulty, may other extrinsic facts be used to remove it, and would evidence respecting the state of the occupation at the making of the will be therefore admissible to shew the intention—admissible in the case of the additional farm, but inadmissible in the case of the substitute farm? Cases may be put in which an unqualified application of the clause would be productive of rather startling results; as where, having a white horse worth say 10*l.*, I bequeath my white horse, but I afterwards sell the white horse, and purchase a black horse worth say 500*l.*, and die, without having altered my will, possessed of the black horse, and no other horse, the legatee will take the black horse, assuming that the will is to speak as if really made the instant before my death, and that a contrary intention is not proveable dehors." (1 Intro. Conv. 385). These remarks shew the great infelicity, if not absurdity, of the enactment. It is possible, however, by a rather strained construction, to deprive it of the mischievous operation suggested by Messrs. Jarman and Hayes, and by other writers. The will is to speak and take effect, with reference to the property comprised in it, as if it had been executed immediately before the death, unless a contrary intention appear by the will, the intention of the framer of the clause probably having been to prevent any dealing with the property by the testator or other circumstances in the meantime from affecting the construction and operation of the will. Now, in order to ascertain the meaning of an instrument, we must apply the words used in it to the state of things existing at the time when they are used. The absurd design of ascertaining the testator's meaning by reference to a state of things which could not possibly be known to him is not to be imputed to the Legislature. We read each gift in the will, then, by the light of the circumstances at the time

* But in Goodlad v. Burnett, (1 Kay & Jo. 343, 347). Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., said that the clause must have some sense given to it as regards personal estate. The difficulty is, that the result of "giving sense" to the clause is to produce nonsense.

it was written. We ascertain what property was comprised in it, and the intended disposition of that property. Having done this, we apply the 24th section, and say, "This gift of this property takes effect as if the testator had so given this property by a will executed the moment before his death." So understood, the enactment, though superfluous, is perhaps harmless. It leaves the law, as altered by the 3rd and 23rd sections, without further alteration, and without solving any of the real difficulties which occur in applying it. When a testator gives "all the property I possess in the funds," it may be said, as was held in Cockren v. Cockren, (14 Sim. 248), that is the same as "all I now possess," and excludes future acquisitions. The distinction between this expression and "all my property in the funds" is not very striking, and it becomes more doubtful when we bring into consideration other expressions equivocating between the generic and the special—as "all my horses on my farm," "all my black horses," "all my monies out in mortgage," "all the property I have in the world," "all the money I have at my bankers." However, in Doe v. Walker, (12 M. & W. 591), where a testator, by his will, made before the late act, gave "all my messuages, farms, lands, tenements, and hereditaments which I am seised of, situate in Great Bowden," and then purchased other lands, and then by a codicil made after the passing of the act, not in terms extending the gift, republished his will, it was held that the after-acquired estates passed; and the Court relied on the codicil as if it were a repetition of every word of the will, as well as on the 24th section of the act. This decision is encountered by the decision and the reasoning of Lord Cranworth, V. C., in Skilwell v. Mellersh, (20 L. J., Ch., 357), where a direction in a will, that a legatee should account for "all sums of money which I have already given and advanced to him," was held not to extend to advances made after the date of the will, and before the republication of it by a codicil. "In my opinion, when it is said a codicil republishing a will, or confirming a will, makes the will speak from the time of republication, that does not mean that you are to read the will in any way different from the mode in which it would have been read if the testator had died the moment after he had executed it. What absurdities otherwise would arise! Suppose I by my will say, 'I give 500*l.* to the present treasurer of Lincoln's-inn,' and this day twelvemonth I republish my will, does that alter the party who is to take the legacy? That must be so if it is to be read as if I had written it over again; the present treasurer would be a different person. So, I conceive, if I had said, 'I devise all the estate of which I am now seised.'" Doe v. Walker was not cited. In Douglas v. Douglas, (Kay, 400), the words, "I hereby exonerate my sister from all claims in respect of money laid out by me in improvements of the estate in Scotland, and which money has, according to the law of Scotland, been charged thereon," was held not to be extended by the act to monies laid out after the date of the will. In holding (in Cole v. Scott, 1 Mac. & G. 529) that the word "now" confines the devise to the state of things at the date of the will, Lord Cottenham, C., said, "It appears to me just the same as if the testator had said, 'all the freehold and leasehold estates of which I am on this 29th April, 1843, seised and entitled.'" In Emuss v. Smith (2 De G. & S. 733) a devise of "all my freehold estate at D., which I purchased of B.," was held not to pass a small piece of leasehold purchased at the same time of B., and held with the freehold, the freehold of which the testator after the date of his will purchased from C. Sir J. L. Knight Bruce, V. C., asked, "Suppose a man to have a brown horse, and bequeath it, and then to sell it, and buy another brown horse, does the horse of which he was possessed at the time of his death pass?" In Oakes v. Oakes (9 Hare, 666) a testator bequeathed "all my Great Western railway shares, and all other railway shares of which I shall be possessed at the time of my decease." The shares which he had at the date of his will were subsequently converted into consolidated stock, and the testator purchased a further amount of such stock. It was held that the stock out of which the shares intended to be bequeathed were converted passed, but not the shares subsequently purchased; in other words, that the will was to be construed, for the purpose of ascertaining the property comprised in it, as speaking from its date, and not from the death. On the other hand, in Goodlad v. Burnett, (1 Kay & Jo. 341), Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., held that a gift of "my New 3*l.* 10*s.* per Cent. Annuities" was not specific, but passed all the annuities of that kind which belonged to the testatrix at her death. His Honor admitted that before the act the gift would have been specific, as in Miller v. Little, ("all my shares in the Grand Junction Canal Navigation"), but said that the act "must have some sense given to it as regards personal estate. It is true, that as regards personal estate, there was no doubt, before the passing of the Wills Act, that the will spoke from the death in most cases, but not in all; and it is precisely to the particular class of cases of which the present is an instance that the Wills Act would seem to have application. . . . When I refer to a particular thing, such as a ring or a horse, and bequeath it as my ring or my horse, it seems to me there might be considerable difficulty in saying that the contrary intention, to which the act in its 24th section refers, does not appear on the face of the will; but when a bequest is of that which is generic—of that which may be increased or diminished, then I apprehend the Wills Act requires something more on the face of the will, for the purpose of indicating such contrary intention, than the mere circumstance that the subject of the bequest is designated by the pronoun 'my.'" We venture to suggest that the decision would have been more satisfactory if it had been rested on a disavowal of the construction in Miller v. Little, rather than on the Wills Act, upon which it puts a construction contrary to that adopted in Oakes v. Oakes. If before the act the use of the word "my" expressed an intention to exclude after-acquired property, it expresses that intention still; for we cannot admit what the Court said in the same case, that against the disappointment of the intention in the particular case was to be set the consideration that a person might leave "his will in a state like the present purposely, and because he believed that by the operation of the Wills Act the words he had used would carry the whole property he might have at his death of the kind bequeathed." This is a violent stretching and misapplication of the maxim "communis error facit jus." The cases of O'Toole v. Brown, (3 El. & Bl. 576; 18 Jur., part 1, p. 1113); Wilson v. Eden, (16 Jur., part 1, p. 1017; 5 Exch. 752); and Gibson v. Gibson, (22 L. J., Ch., 346), involved the application of the 24th section, but threw no light upon it. We may notice, in conclusion, that the singular oversight committed by Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., in the case of Bullock v. Bennett, (1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 443), of applying the 24th section to determine the person, event, or status contemplated by a testator, (a gift to M., a widow, until her marriage, followed by marriage in the testator's lifetime), has been corrected on appeal. (S. C., 1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 567).

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH, June 30.—After judgment had been delivered in Reg. v. The Fleetwood, Preston, and West Riding Junction Railway Company; Lady Wenman v. Mackenzie; Reg. v. The Corporation of Greenwich; and Dorling, App., and The Epsom Board of Health, Resps., Coleridge, J., stated that the only cases which remained undecided were Layton v. Fenwick and In re Barber; that the latter case had been argued so late in Trinity Term, and was of such length, that the Court was not then prepared to give judgment in it.

A correspondent of The Times calls attention to the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 29, whereby the period provided for re-registering Irish judgments will expire on the 15th inst.

Another correspondent asks for information as to the usual custom of London bankers with reference to the presentation of cheques. He states, that on Friday, the 8th ult., he paid into a provincial bank a cheque on Strahan, Paul, & Co., which was forwarded the same day, but not presented till the Monday following, owing, as he is informed, to its passing the clearing house. On whom, he asks, does the liability rest, for had the cheque been presented on the Saturday, it would have been paid.

FIRST REPORT OF THE COUNTY COURTS COMMISSION.

Ejectment.

This Jurisdiction to be extended.—This jurisdiction has been found beneficial to the public, and, subject to some modification, might be usefully extended. We think that the county court ought to have jurisdiction only in those cases where the amount of the annual rent and annual value does not exceed 50*l.* Unless such an alteration in the law be made, the jurisdiction would continue to embrace a class of cases which the Legislature could not have intended to be decided in the county court. Thus, in the case of land let on a building lease, the reserved rent might not exceed 50*l.*, but the value of the houses erected upon it being of many thousand pounds' value, the annual value might far exceed 50*l.* We therefore recommend that where the annual value of the premises sought to be recovered exceeds the amount of 50*l.*, although the rent reserved does not exceed that amount, the case should not be within the jurisdiction of the county court. With this alteration of the law, we think that this jurisdiction might be usefully extended to cases where one half year's rent is in arrear, and the landlord or lessor has a right by law to re-enter for non-payment thereof, but no sufficient distress has been left on the premises to countervail such rent; and also to the case of mortgages where the money lent does not exceed 100*l.*, and the mortgagee is entitled to obtain possession. In the latter case we think that the judge should have power to postpone granting a warrant of possession for any period which the judge might think fit, and should be invested with the same powers as might be exercised by the court in pursuance of the first Common-law Procedure Act, sect. 219, in actions of ejectment between mortgagee and mortgagor.

Notice of Proceeding to be given by Tenant to immediate Landlord.—We think it also a desirable provision, that where a sub-tenant is served with a summons at the instance of the superior landlord, he should be bound to give notice to his immediate landlord, who should be entitled to come in and defend.

Claim for Meane Profits may be joined.—We also think that it would be convenient that a claim for meane profits not exceeding 50*l.* in amount should be allowed to be included in a plaint for the recovery of possession of the demised premises.

Judge's Decision subject to Appeal, as in ordinary Cases.—We are, however, of opinion that the finality of the judge's decision in cases of the above description should be modified, and that an appeal ought to be allowed where the annual rent and value of the premises or the mortgage debt exceeds 20*l.*

This Mode of Appeal to continue, besides Cross Action, as at present.—It appears to us that this mode of appeal should be allowed in addition to that provided by sects. 126 and 127 of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93, as stated ante, p. 246.

Replevin.

The proceedings in replevin may, in our opinion, be materially improved by the introduction of certain alterations, which we shall proceed to state.

Present Mode of proceeding defective.—Taking a distress, in order to secure a compensation for an alleged wrong, as it is a proceeding which is taken without the intervention of legal process, and dispossesses the owner of his property, should be subjected to as easy and prompt a revision as is practicable. The action of replevin, when actually brought to trial, may dispose of the question raised between the parties as to the right to distrain; but the steps now necessary in order to bring that question before a competent tribunal are slow, inconvenient, and unsatisfactory. (See ante, pp. 180, 238). When the chattel has been seized, if the owner be desirous of contesting the lawfulness of the seizure, he must give the replevin bond to the sheriff or his replevin clerk. To compel him to give this bond to the sheriff himself, who has only one office in the county, would in many cases operate as a denial of justice. By law the sheriff is only bound to appoint four replevin clerks in each county, and the persons whose chattels are most likely to be distrained are not generally aware of the names or residences of those clerks. Consequently, in the majority of instances, the alleged aggrieved party submits to the distress, or travels with his sureties to the county town in order to give the usual bond. In the former case, the chattels may be sold at considerable loss, or an oppressive arrangement be made for the surrender of them; in the latter, the replevisor may be compelled to take a long and expensive journey with his sureties. Again: although the replevisor be desirous of trying his cause in the superior court, he is obliged to give the bond to prosecute his suit in the county court, and afterwards to remove it by certiorari from the latter court, after complying with the conditions imposed by the statute. Again: if the replevisor be desirous of obtaining possession of his chattel, and prefers depositing money to giving security, he is not permitted so to do. The same observation as to not being allowed to deposit money applies to cases of removal in conformity with the provisions of the statute. Again: the decision of the county court judge on questions of law in those cases where neither party removes, although the rent or damage exceeds the sum of 20*l.*, is not subject to appeal.

Amendments suggested.—To remove these objections, we recommend, first, that the clerk of the county court should be the sole replevin clerk in each district, and perform all the duties of that officer. Secondly, that the replevisor should be permitted, instead of giving security, to pay into the hands of the clerk a sum proportioned to the amount of the rent claimed or the damage alleged to have been done, such sum, in case of dispute, to be settled by the clerk, together with a certain sum for costs. Thirdly, that a similar substitution of payment of money instead of giving security under the statute should be permitted when the plaint is removed. Fourthly, that the replevisor, if desirous of trying the cause in the superior court, should, on making a declaration similar to the statutory one, be permitted to give security, or pay money into the hands of the clerk; and that on such security being given or payment made, the chattel should be delivered to the replevisor, and the action of replevin be at once commenced in the superior court. Fifthly, that if the replevisor be desirous of proceeding in the county court, the practice as to removal now prevailing under the statute should continue, but modified by the right to deposit money instead of giving security. Sixthly, that where the cause is not removed by either party, the decision of the judge on questions of law should be subject to appeal, in the same manner as on ordinary claims in cases where the rent or damages exceed 20*l*.

In other respects Practice to remain.—Except so far as the suggested alterations extend, we think that the present practice in replevin should continue unaltered.

Interpleader.

Jurisdiction by Interpleader generally, vested in County Court.—The county court has at present jurisdiction in cases of interpleader, arising out of claims made on chattels taken in execution, but has no jurisdiction in other cases, where interpleader is allowed in the superior courts. We are of opinion that such a jurisdiction should be conferred on the county court, and that wherever interpleader would be permitted in the superior courts of law, the suitors in the county court should be allowed a similar privilege.

Decision of County Court Judge subject to Appeal, even in Case of Goods taken in Execution.—We think that in the cases last mentioned, and in those where claims are made on goods taken in execution, the decision of the county court judge ought to be subject to appeal, in the same manner and on the same grounds as in ordinary claims exceeding 20*l*.

Where second Action in Superior Court, Jurisdiction of County Court not to be ousted.—Where, in cases of interpleader, the second action is brought or threatened in the superior tribunal, we think that the right to interplead ought still to be reserved to the defendant in the county court. In the event of an issue being directed by the judge of the county court, he might select that tribunal to dispose of it which appeared to him most convenient for the purpose. Should a proper case be shewn for altering the tribunal before which the case was so directed to be tried, a judge of the superior court might be enabled to interfere.

Acknowledgments by Married Women.

We think also that it would be desirable to enable the judges of the county courts to take the acknowledgments of married women, in pursuance of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74.

II.—WITH REFERENCE TO ADDITIONAL SECURITIES FOR THE DUE EXERCISE OF THE JURISDICTION.

We will consider, first, proceedings for the removal of causes; secondly, prohibitions; thirdly, appeals.

Certiorari.

First, as to the writ of certiorari. The county court being a court of record, the mode of removing its proceedings is by certiorari. By the provisions of sect. 90 of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, no case can be removed from the county court where the claim does not exceed 5*l*., and then only by leave of a judge of the superior court, on such terms as he thinks fit, if he be of opinion that it is a proper case to be tried in the superior court. By sect. 16 of the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, removal by writ of error is prohibited.

*May be granted in Claims not exceeding 5*l*., on special Grounds.*—As a general rule, the amount of the claim is a convenient test of the importance of the question to be determined, and therefore it is generally desirable that where a claim does not exceed 5*l*. the cause should be irremovable. But it occasionally happens that questions of great difficulty, both of law and fact, arise in cases where the amount in dispute does not exceed 5*l*. Thus, questions of fact occur where the claims belong to a class, each of which individually is of less amount than 5*l*., but which, being questions of fact, cannot, as the law now stands, be raised before a superior tribunal. Thus, in actions by several workmen against a contractor, or by several passengers on a railway, or by several customers of a common carrier, where in each case the demand does not exceed 5*l*., although the question is of considerable importance, and in effect brings into litigation an aggregate amount far beyond 5*l*., no means exist at present of removing such actions into the superior court. Again: difficult questions of law, other than those which are excluded from the jurisdiction of the court, may arise, or such questions may be so mixed with questions of fact as not to be conveniently separated, and yet the amount in dispute may not exceed 5*l*.

Security for, or Deposit of, Amount of Claim and Costs.

—We therefore recommend that where a claim, whether in tort or contract, does not exceed 5*l*., it shall be competent for the defendant to remove the plaint into one of the superior courts, by leave of a judge of those courts, but only on giving security for the claim and costs in the superior court, not exceeding 100*l*., or on depositing that amount, and on such other terms as the judge may think proper to impose.

In larger Claims.—As before observed, it is competent for a defendant to remove a plaint for a sum exceeding 5*l*. and not exceeding 50*l*. from the county court, by permission of a judge of the superior court, on such terms as he shall think fit.

Security or Deposit required.—We are of opinion that in such cases the law should remain unaltered, except that the judge should further be empowered to make the costs of the proceedings in the county court, which under the present law are lost to the party, costs in the cause.

Proper Checks on vexatious Removals.—While, however, we recommend greater facilities than now by law exist for removing causes from the county court, we are anxious that such facility should not be used for the purpose of vexation or oppression.

Applications for Certiorari may at present be repeated.

—By law, if one of the superior courts, or a judge thereof, refuse a writ of certiorari, it is competent for the applicant to renew his application in either of the other two courts, and in the event of a second refusal, he may apply to the third court. This state of the law appears to us inconvenient.

One Application only should be made.—We recommend, therefore, that where an application is made for a writ of certiorari to one court or to one judge, for the purpose of removing a plaint from the county court, and the application is contested, the refusal by that court or judge, subject in the latter case to the usual appeal to the court, should be binding in the matter, and that no further application should be permitted to any other of the superior courts on the same grounds.

When obtained, Writ may be used vexatiously.—In several cases also parties have, by their mode of proceeding when the writ of certiorari has been obtained, rendered it a medium of harassing their opponents. Thus, a defendant has waited until a plaintiff has incurred all the expenses of preparing for trial, and when the cause was called on, has produced a writ of certiorari to remove the proceedings. The plaintiff under such circumstances has no remedy for his costs, as by the operation of the writ the parties have ceased to be suitors of the court.

Notice of obtaining Writ to be given on Pain of Costs by Order of County Court Judge.—We further recommend that in all cases where a certiorari has been obtained ex parte for the removal of a plaintiff from the county court, and the party obtaining it has not lodged the writ with the clerk of the county court two clear days at the least before the day fixed for hearing the plaintiff, and if he has not given notice to the plaintiff of such certiorari having been obtained one clear day at the least before the day fixed for hearing the plaintiff, the judge of the county court ought to be empowered, at his discretion, to order the party obtaining the certiorari to pay all costs of the day, or so much thereof as he shall think fit, if the court or judge granting the certiorari has made no order respecting such costs.

Application in certain Cases a Stay of Proceedings.—We think that a court or judge to whom an application is made for a certiorari to remove a plaintiff from a county court, or to whom application on affidavit is made for a rule or summons to shew cause why a certiorari should not issue, ought to be empowered in either case to grant a rule or summons to shew cause why a certiorari should not issue; and that such rule or summons, if so directed, should be a stay of proceedings until the determination of such rule or summons, or until the court or judge shall otherwise order; and that the party applying should serve a copy of such rule or summons upon the clerk of the county court; and if such copy be not served upon the clerk of the county court two clear days at the least before the day fixed for hearing the plaintiff, and if the rule or summons be not served on the plaintiff one clear day at the least before the day fixed for hearing the plaintiff, the judge of the county court should be empowered, at his discretion, to order the party applying to pay all the costs of the day, or so much thereof as he may think fit, unless the court or judge granting the rule or summons has made some order respecting such costs.

Prohibition.

Secondly, with respect to the writ of prohibition.

The remarks we have made concerning the writ of certiorari are applicable to the writ of prohibition, which may, in the hands of evil-disposed persons, be rendered equally oppressive.

Should be subject to same Restrictions as Certiorari.—We recommend, therefore, that restrictions similar to those which we think desirable in the case of writs of certiorari, except as to deposit of or security for costs, should, so far as they are applicable, be imposed on writs of prohibition.

We further recommend, with regard to the writ of prohibition, that where it is directed to the judge of the county court, the decision of the superior court should be final, and that no declaration or further proceedings in prohibition be allowed.

Appeal.

Thirdly, as to appeal. This may be either on questions of law or questions of fact.

First, as to questions of law.

Decisions of Judges of Superior Courts subject to Appeal.—In treating this branch of the subject, we are naturally led to consider the general principle of all tribunals with reference to the power of reviewing the decision of the presiding judge. As a general rule, the decision of every judge of the superior courts is liable to be reviewed by some higher judicial authority. Upon the beneficial influence of such a rule it is unnecessary to enlarge.

In Claims not exceeding 20l.—In causes peculiarly within the jurisdiction of the county courts, however, one important object sought to be attained is finality, with which a right to appeal would injuriously interfere.

No Appeal should be allowed.—We think, therefore, that it would be contrary to sound principle to allow an appeal, either on questions of law or fact, when the matter in dispute does not exceed 20l. in amount. If any difficult question of law be likely to arise in a cause of the amount we have mentioned, the facilities for removal already existing or which we have recommended would prevent a failure of justice; and with respect to unexpected difficulties arising at the trial, they must be exceptional, and should not interfere with the general principle of the jurisdiction.

In other Cases, Right of Appeal should remain as at present.—With respect to claims which exceed the amount of 20l., but do not exceed 50l., and cases within the consent clause of the Extending Act, a right of appeal exists, and we are of opinion that no change should be made in the law in that respect.

Similar Power of Appeal in other Cases within the Legal Jurisdiction.—We also think that the power of appeal should exist in all claims exceeding 20l. within the legal jurisdiction of the court, including that branch which has lately been conferred in matters of revenue.

Secondly, as to appeals on questions of fact.

With respect to those questions, we are of opinion, that whether under the exclusive, concurrent, or consent jurisdiction, they ought not to be allowed.

In cases within the exclusive jurisdiction they would be extremely mischievous, as tending to promote litigation and increase expense.

In cases within the two other branches of the jurisdiction, as the judge only acquires power to decide the case by the consent of the parties, his determination is similar to the award of an arbitrator, and on questions of fact ought to be equally final.

Further suggestions on the subject of appeal may be found under certain specific heads of jurisdiction, which are the subjects of this report.

Mandamus.

In cases where it is necessary to interfere by issuing a mandamus to a judge or any other officer of a county court, in order to compel him to perform some specific act, we think it desirable that the superior courts of common law should have power, instead of issuing a mandamus, to grant a rule for that purpose; and on the same principle that we have stated in proceedings by certiorari or prohibition, in order to prevent vexatious proceedings on the part of those who desire the interference of the superior court, the complainant should be limited to an application to one court for the purpose in question.

JUDGES, OFFICERS, AND ADVOCATES.

We shall now proceed to consider whether the present law, with reference to the judges, officers, and advocates of the court, can be beneficially altered.

Judge.

First, with reference to the judges.

Circuit.—It has already been stated, that among the duties devolving on the judge is that of going once in every month round the circuit to which he has been appointed. It has been suggested that it is not desirable that a judge should thus continuously go the same circuit, but that, in conformity with the general practice of the superior courts, he should go a different circuit every month.

Should not change Circuit.—We have considered the reasons urged for making the proposed alteration, and we are not prepared to recommend any change in the law on the subject.

As to Abolition or Distribution of Courts.—It is proper here to observe that complaints have been made of the present distribution of the districts among the different circuits. It has also been suggested that several of the existing courts might properly be abolished, on account of the small amount of business transacted in them.

In order to dispose of the former subject, it will be necessary to determine on the proper course to be pursued in the latter.

No Suggestion made.—As we have not yet been able to obtain all the information on these subjects which we think requisite, we propose to reserve them for future inquiry.

Power of Judge to change Venue in certain Cases.—At present the judge has no power to change the venue to an adjoining district, when on reasonable grounds it appears to him that the cause might be more conveniently or more fairly tried there. The want of this power has been productive of complaints. We think that it would be beneficial that the judge should have power to change the venue to an adjoining district, on the application of either party.

We think also, that when the judge is interested in the matter of the suit, it would be convenient to allow him to change the venue, in a similar manner, of his own accord, or at the instance of either party, or that the person having a claim on him should be enabled to sue in an adjoining district.

Qualification of Deputy Judge to be the same as that of Judge.—With respect to the appointment of a deputy by a judge, the qualification required of the proposed deputy is not in all cases, as we have seen, (ante, p. 182), the same as that required for a judge.

We are of opinion that as the duties which the deputy, except in matters of charity, is called upon to perform are the same as those of the judge himself, and as he is invested with the same powers, and the same effect is attributed to his decisions, the same qualification ought to be requisite for a deputy judge as the law now requires for the judge himself.

In Case of Judge's Death, Deputy to continue to act until new Appointment.—When a deputy has been duly appointed, it has occurred that the judge dies, and the deputy continues to act in ignorance of the death. By law the acts performed by him after the death of the judge are invalid, and in such cases great confusion has been and may be hereafter the result.

In order to obviate this inconvenience, we recommend that under such circumstances the acts of the deputy shall be valid, notwithstanding the death of the judge; and that in order to prevent the delay of the proceedings of the court, the deputy may continue to act until a successor to such judge shall be appointed, unless the Chancellor shall otherwise order; and that in respect of the period that he acts after the death of the judge, he should receive such remuneration as the Chancellor shall appoint, to be deducted from the salary of the successor.

In Case of Judge's Death, Proceedings to continue from Court to Court.—It has also occurred, in consequence of the death of a judge, that considerable delay, expense, and confusion have resulted to the parties litigant, as in such cases the proceedings are not continued to a subsequent court.

We recommend, therefore, that in such cases the proceedings should be continued to the next and any subsequent court, in the same manner as if they had been adjourned in the ordinary way, and that no additional fees should be paid in respect of such adjournment.

The same where Judge unavoidably absent.—Similar inconveniences result where a court is not held in consequence of the sudden illness of the judge, or of some accidental circumstance which prevents his attendance.

To obviate the inconvenience thence resulting, we make a similar recommendation. In the latter case, however, we recommend that the clerk should be required to enter on the minutes of the next succeeding court the cause of the judge's non-attendance.

Not more than 150 Summonses ought to be made returnable on any one Day.—We think it right to observe that our attention has been drawn to a prejudicial practice which exists in a few courts, of issuing a greater number of summonses returnable on one day than can be disposed of in a satisfactory manner in that period. In some instances more than 300 summonses have been made returnable on one day. This is obviously improper, and we are of opinion that the greatest number of summonses returnable on any one day ought not to exceed 150. We also think that it would be a great relief to suitors if no greater number than fifty summonses were made returnable at any one hour.

Clerk.

Secondly, with reference to the clerk.

Recommendations in the Case of Clerk's Death.—When a clerk dies or is removed, the power of his deputy or his assistant clerk ceases. Some time may elapse before a successor is appointed, but until then the business of the office is stopped, and great inconvenience accrues to the public.

To prevent this inconvenience, we recommend that, in either of the events stated, the deputy, or one of the assistant clerks, or a clerk temporarily appointed by the judge without the sanction of the Chancellor, should perform the duties of such deceased or removed clerk, until a successor is duly appointed.

We shall defer the consideration of the mode of remunerating the clerks until we have disposed of the question of fees.

Chief Clerk to be appointed to each District.—In connexion with this part of our inquiries, it is proper to refer to an objection which has been made to the present system, which we have stated at p. 180, of one person holding the office of clerk in more than one district. The Legislature has, by the provisions of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 54, s. 17, prohibited such a practice for the future, except under special circumstances. The information which we have been enabled to procure upon the subject shews the propriety of that provision.

We are, therefore, of opinion that arrangements should be made to secure to each court the exertions of a chief clerk.

High Bailiff.

Secondly, with reference to the high bailiff.

Similar Recommendations in the Case of High Bailiff.—Where the high bailiff dies or is removed, observations similar to those made in the case of the clerks are applicable.

In such cases we recommend that the duties of high bailiff be discharged by the assistant bailiffs already appointed, or by persons to be appointed by the judge or by the clerk, until a successor be duly appointed.

High Bailiffs not to serve Subpoenas.—With respect to one portion of the duties now discharged by the high bailiff, that of serving subpoenas, we think that he should be relieved from the performance of that duty, and that the parties requiring the attendance of witnesses should be permitted to subpoena them. At present the number of subpoenas issued is comparatively very small, and therefore but little loss of fees would accrue in consequence of the alteration. Besides, the duty of making a tender of necessary expenses, and of fulfilling the other conditions necessary to compel attendance, would be more conveniently performed by the parties themselves. We think also that the subpoena should be issued gratis in blank. These recommendations would in many cases obviate the necessity of a second attendance at the office, as the subpoenas would then be taken out at the same time that the instructions for the plaint are given.

Bailiff to act beyond Limits of District in certain Cases without Leave of Judge.—By the present law a high bailiff can only serve process within the district for which he is appointed, unless a special order of the judge be made for that purpose. This, in some instances, has been found productive of inconvenience, where the precise boundary with reference to the defendant's residence is doubtful. The same inconvenience arises in executing process against the goods or person. In the latter cases the party liable frequently removes his person or his property over the boundary, and thus sets the process of the court at defiance.

We think it desirable that the high bailiff of each district should be permitted, without leave of the judge, to serve or execute the process of the court, either upon or against the person or the goods of the party liable, within 500 yards of the boundary of such district, but without being entitled to any additional fee in respect of the greater distance travelled for the purpose of such service or execution.

We shall hereafter consider, in connexion with the question of fees, the mode in which the high bailiff should be remunerated.

PROCEDURE.

We shall now consider the procedure in the county court. It appears to us that some alterations are necessary in order to render its proceedings more efficient.

Witnesses.

Witnesses in Custody to be brought up on Judge's Order.—We are of opinion that the judge of the county court should have power to issue an order commanding those who have the custody of prisoners required as witnesses, whether within his district or not, to bring them up before the court, on tender, to the person having the proposed witness in custody, of a proper sum to defray the expenses of the officer and prisoner going, remaining, and returning.

Amendment.

We think that the provisions of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1852, with respect to amendments, might with benefit be introduced into the county court.

Judgment.

Effect of County Court Judgment not exceeding 20l. in Amount.—First, as to the effect to be given to a judgment of the county court. By law it is competent, where a judgment not exceeding 20l. has been recovered, for the judgment creditor to seize all the personalty of the defendant, with certain exceptions, and by proceeding on a judgment summons the defendant may in certain cases be committed to prison for a period not exceeding forty days.

To have no greater Effect than at present.—We do not propose that any greater effect than the law now permits should be given to a judgment for that amount.

Land should not be extendible under it.—It has been suggested that the high bailiff should have power to seize the land of the defendant under a warrant on such a judgment; but we are of opinion that it is not desirable that such a power should exist. First, it is not probable that a person who is unable to pay a sum not exceeding 20l. should have any land which would be extendible under an elegit; and, secondly, if he have, the consequence would be that a charge would be created upon the land, and thus a very inconvenient clog upon the title would be the result. We do not, therefore, think it desirable to facilitate the creation of such a charge.

Effect of Judgment exceeding 20l. should on certain Conditions be the same as that of Judgment of like Amount in Superior Courts.—With relation, however, to judgments for sums exceeding 20l., we think, first, that the power of the judge to direct payment by instalments without the consent of the plaintiff should cease; secondly, that upon a judgment of a superior court at Westminster being satisfied that the judgment debtor has no personalty which can be taken to satisfy the judgment, the judgment creditor should be permitted to sue out a writ of certiorari to remove such judgment into one of the superior courts, and such judgment, when so removed, should have the same effect, and the same proceedings might be had thereon as on a judgment of such court, except that no action of debt should be brought thereon without leave of the court, or a judge thereof.

Warrant.

Execution or Summons for Commitment to issue any Time within six Years.—By the present practice warrants of execution or summonses for commitment cannot issue, where more than a year has elapsed since judgment was pronounced, without leave of the judge.

By analogy to the altered practice of the superior courts, we think it desirable that in such cases, if the judgment be not more than six years old, the warrant or summons should issue without leave of the judge.

Warrants of Execution or for Commitment to be in force for a Year.—By the present practice a warrant of execution or for commitment continues in force for three months only. It frequently occurs that within the three months the bailiff is unable to seize the goods or take the person of the party against whom a warrant has been issued, although, if a longer period were allowed for the purpose, he might obey the warrant. This necessitates frequent renewals of the warrant, producing inconvenience and expense.

We therefore recommend that the warrant should be in force for one year, but that at the expiration of every calendar month the bailiff should be required to enter in a book kept for that purpose whether the warrant had been executed, and if not, why not; and that this book should be always open to inspection without fee; and that in the case of foreign executions, the bailiff of the foreign court should be required to make a similar entry.

Executions.

Questions have arisen as to the mode of determining the priority of executions when sued out of the county court.

Priority of Executions from County Court inter se.—We think that the priority of executions sued out of the county court should be determined by the time at which an application is made to the clerk to sue out execution, and that he should be required to enter in a book to be kept for the purpose the precise time at which such application was made. This provision is necessary, because the warrant is delivered to the bailiff by the clerk, and not by the party, as in the superior courts. The only effective step which a party can take for the purpose of suing out execution on his judgment is to direct the clerk to issue the warrant.

In Conflict with Executions from Superior Court.—Doubts have frequently arisen as to which execution is entitled to priority, where executions have been issued against the same defendant from the superior court and the county court. No express provision has at present been made upon this subject, and it is important that the question of priority between these conflicting executions should be settled.

To depend on Priority of Instructions to Clerk or Delivery to Sheriff.—We think that the priority should be determined by the time of the delivery of the writ to the sheriff to be executed, or of the application to the clerk to issue a warrant to be executed, as the case may be.

STARKIE'S LAW OF EVIDENCE.—NEW EDITION.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE OF THE LAW OF EVIDENCE. By THOMAS STARKIE, Esq. Fourth Edition, with very considerable alterations and additions; incorporating the Statutes and reported Cases to the time of publication. By G. M. DOWDESWELL and J. G. MALCOLM, Esqrs., Barristers at Law. Just published, in 1 vol. royal 8vo., price 14. 16s. cloth.

"Fortunately for the Profession, the new edition has been intrusted to gentlemen, of whom one is well known, not only as a ripe and accomplished lawyer, (doctrinā malidus), but as a judicious editor, knowing how to withhold as well as how to apply his hand. Amid the present plague of reports mere industry is not sufficient to qualify even a second-rate editor. . . . It is evident that the editors have not been blinded by their respect for the author, but have altered, corrected, and amended wherever they have seen occasion. Such a course could not be pursued safely upon a small stock of learning or of judgment; and in our opinion it has been pursued, not only with safety, but with manifest advantage to the book; so that the fourth edition of Starkie is to the existing law what the first edition was to the law in 1824. . . . We wish we had some means of identifying Mr. Malcolm's portions of the work. As it is, being hitherto unknown in authorship, he must be content with the praise of having borne a part where all was good."—Jurist.

"It is also the only work of which a new edition has been brought out at such a time as to render it possible that it should apply to practice, with any degree of consideration and accuracy, the modern changes in the law. . . . We think the editors will have gone far towards restoring the admirable work of Mr. Starkie to its original character of the best work on the law of evidence which has yet been produced."—Legal Observer.

The attention of the Profession is invited to the advantages offered by this Office to Solicitors and their Clients, which will be found to be greater than in most other Life Offices.

ADVANTAGES TO THE ASSURED.

1. Four-fifths of the Profits are divided triennially amongst the Assured.

In some Offices the Assured may not be entitled to a Bonus until the expiration of ten years from the time of effecting the Policy, whilst in this Office three years is the utmost limit.

2. At the first division of Profits in May, 1853, a Reversionary Bonus, averaging 451. per cent., was declared on All Participating Policies. In some cases the Bonus exceeded 611. per cent. on the premiums paid.

On reference to the Prospectuses of some of the principal Offices, it will be found that the Bonus on their first division was much less, viz. 234. per cent.

3. The next division of Profits will be declared in May, 1856, when all Policies effected in 1855 will participate.

In most Offices Assurers do not participate in the Profits until after payment of from three to five annual premiums, but in this Office they may participate on payment of a single premium.

ADVANTAGES TO THE PROFESSION.

A Commission of 101. per cent. is allowed on the first year's premium, and 51. per cent. annually afterwards; and, as an additional advantage to persons introducing business, the Shareholders have by the Deed of Settlement given up half of their Profits for the benefit of such persons as extra Commission.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JULY 14, 1855.

In the case of Watts v. Porter, (1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 133), A., by agreement in writing, charged a sum of stock, standing in the name of trustees for him, with a sum of money lent to him by the plaintiff. The plaintiff did not give notice of this charge to the trustees. Subsequently a creditor of A. recovered judgment against him, and obtained an order under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 14, charging the stock, of which he gave notice to the trustees; and it was held by Lord Campbell, C. J., and Wightman and Crompton, JJ., (Erle, J., dissentiente), that the charge of the judgment creditor was entitled to priority over the plaintiff's charge.

We understand that there is a difference of opinion in the Profession as to the soundness of this decision; but we must confess that the reasons given by the majority of the learned judges, and their conclusion, appear to us satisfactory. The words of the 14th section of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, are, that if any judgment debtor shall have any stock "standing in his name in his own right, or in the name of any person in trust for him, it shall be lawful for a judge, on the application of any judgment creditor, to order that such stock, &c. shall stand charged with the payment of the amount for which such judgment shall have been so recovered, and interest thereon, and such order shall entitle the judgment creditor to all such remedies as he would have been entitled to if such charge had been made in his favour by the judgment debtor." Lord Campbell, C. J., delivering the judgment of the majority of the judges, said, "By the order, the stock is to stand charged with the payment of the money recovered by the judgment, and it is to have the same effect as if such charge had been made in favour of the judgment creditor by the judgment debtor. If at the time of the order a charge had been given on the fund by the judgment debtor in favour of the judgment creditor, the judgment creditor having no notice of any previous charge, and he had given notice of his charge to the trustees, independently of the statute it would have had priority over the previous charge created in favour of Elizabeth Davis,"

(i. e. the first mortgagee), "of which no notice had been given to them. But by the statute the judge's order is to be a charge upon the stock, as if a charge had been given by an instrument which the debtor had himself signed; and the remedies upon it are the same. A charge so given by the debtor to a creditor, without notice of any previous charge, if notice of it be served upon the trustees, would certainly be preferred to a previous equitable charge, of which the trustees had no notice. It is the notice only which establishes any privity between the trustees and the party in whose favour the charge is given; by such notice only is the security completed. When it is given, the trustees become trustees for the party in whose favour it is given, and till this charge is satisfied, they can apply no part of the fund to satisfy the demand of a party who had obtained a prior equitable charge, of which they had subsequent notice."

Thus, as it seems to us, the words of the statute were construed in their natural sense; the rules of law relating to equitable mortgages were applied; and priority of notice was held to give priority of charge, in accordance with the doctrine established by Dearle v. Hall and Loveridge v. Cooper, (3 Russ. 1).

In opposition to the decision, it is contended that the charging order given by the statute is only in the nature of an equitable execution, operating merely upon the interest which would remain in the debtor after satisfaction of all previous charges, whether perfected by notice or not. But this would narrow the statute; it would not give the creditor "all such remedies as he would have been entitled to if such charge had been made in his favour by the judgment debtor." On the contrary, it would place him in a very inferior position.

In support of this limited effect of the charge it is also argued that the charge intended by the statute is a "lawful" charge. If this means such a charge as the law permits a debtor to make, the observation is correct; but it cannot be confined to such a charge as the law allows the debtor "honestly" or "fairly" to make. The fact that the debtor obtained the money charged by falsely representing that the stock was unincumbered would not render the charge illegal. If he made fifty charges on the stock they would all be lawful, however insufficient the stock might be to discharge them, and whatever might be the morality of the transaction, or the liability in which it might involve the debtor.

It is urged, that after an assignment of the stock by the equitable owner to a creditor, without notice by the latter to the trustee, the stock is no longer standing in the name of the trustee in trust for the debtor, and therefore the case is not within the 14th section of the statute. Now, whatever may be the rights as between the debtor and his assignee, it is submitted that this is not true as respects the trustee and a subsequent assignee without notice of the prior assignment. The trustee, not having received notice, is not trustee for the first assignee, but for the debtor, (Sugd. V. & P. 1025, 11th ed.); and until notice he would not be liable to that assignee for transferring the fund to the debtor or the subsequent assignee. The question is not whether, as between the debtor and the first assignee, the latter can compel the trustee to transfer the fund to him, but whether, in a competition between rival assignees, the assignee who has given notice has not a better equity or right to call for a transfer than the assignee who has not. To use the words of Sir T. Plumer, "If by the first contract all the thing is given, there remains nothing to be the subject of the second contract;" and it seems to be considered that this was the effect of the agreement to charge in Watts v. Porter. But the thing (i. e. the stock) was, it is submitted, not given by that agreement. All that was thereby given was a right to demand the thing; and the judgment creditor, to whom the statute also gave a right to demand it, having by his notice acquired a better right to demand it, ought to be preferred.

It is a fallacy to represent the judgment creditor as taking the stock from the first mortgagee. The latter never had it; that is, he never had such possession of it as he might and ought to have had; he neglected to acquire the "quasi legal title;" he did not specifically bind the property, and had no rights in rem; whereas the judgment creditor had obtained all such rights, property, and possession as were possible, having regard to the nature of the fund.

It is said that greater effect is given by the decision to an order upon stock standing in the name of a trustee than upon stock standing in the debtor's own name. But in both cases the first mortgagee will have priority if his title is complete; it does not make any difference in the operation of the statute, that in the one case notice is necessary to complete the title, and that in the other case it would be useless and absurd.

To regard the case from another point of view. Suppose that in Watts v. Porter there had been a second mortgage by deed after the judgment, and notice had been given of that second mortgage. Then, according to the opponents of Watts v. Porter, the first mortgagee would stand, in the order of priority, before the judgment creditor who has given notice, but after the second mortgagee, and yet the judgment creditor would have priority over the latter!—unless, indeed, the judgment creditor is to be postponed to all subsequent incumbrancers, and even purchasers.

It is said that the reasons for preferring a second mortgagee who has given notice do not apply to a judgment creditor. Now, (not to urge that a judgment creditor with a charging order is, in fact, an equitable mortgagee); one of the reasons for the preference certainly does apply—namely, the prevention of frauds, by forcing the first mortgagee into giving notice of his security; and if priority is the reward of diligence, why is not a creditor who has obtained a judgment and charge as much entitled to favour as an equitable mortgagee by deed? Surely, if the judgment creditor in Watts v. Porter had not given notice, he would have been postponed to a subsequent mortgagee who had; and if so, he ought to enjoy a corresponding advantage. Why should not the general creditors be entitled to a like protection? The interests of the community at large will be best consulted by extending the rule as widely as possible; and if it does not apply to equitable interests in real estate, the sooner it is made to include them the better.

The authorities appear to support the decision. The language relied upon in Braercliffe v. Dorrington (4 De G. & S. 122) amounted only to an obiter dictum; and whatever were the reasons in Dunster v. Lord Glengall, (3 Ir. Eq. Rep. 47), the decision is not opposed to Watts v. Porter. In the other cases referred to, in opposition to it, the first mortgage was perfected, and could have been sustained against all subsequent incumbrancers, whether under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, or not.

The facts in Dearle v. Hall and Loveridge v. Cooper shew most strongly the expediency of maintaining the doctrine of priority by notice intact, and we are happy to find that it has not been shaken. Esto perpetua.

THE PARTNERSHIP AND LIMITED LIABILITY BILLS.

WE have read these bills as amended in committee, and with the respect and consideration due to the sanction under which they have been produced; but the more we think of them the less we think of them. The alteration made in the Partnership Amendment Bill is the substitution of a provision depriving the lender of his remedy for the debt if he omit to register the loan within ten days, in lieu of the provision which made the exemption from liability as a partner conditional on immediate registration. The clauses now stand thus:—

2. "No person who may hereafter lend any money to any other person not being a banker, or to any partnership or company not being a banking partnership or company, shall be deemed to be a partner with the person or a member of the partnership or company borrowing such money by reason of his receiving or being entitled to receive a portion of the profits made by such person, partnership, or company so borrowing, or a sum varying according to the amount of such profits, either in lieu of or in addition to any interest for or on account of such loan, or by reason of any agreement to bear any portion of the loss which may be sustained by such person, partnership, or company in any trade or business carried on by him or them."

3. "The following particulars in respect of every such loan shall be registered at the office for the regitribution of joint-stock companies in London, in cases where the borrower is resident in England, and at the office for the registration of joint-stock companies in Dublin, in cases where the borrower is resident in Ireland, (that is to say),

The name, place of business, and description of the lender:

The name, place of business, and description of the borrower:

The amount of the loan:

The proportion of profits, interest, or sum varying according to the amount of profits, payable in respect of such loan:

And if such loan be not registered within ten days of the making thereof, if the lender be living at the expiration of such ten days, such loan shall not be recoverable; and if any material omission or misstatement is made in any of the above particulars, no interest or profits in respect of such loan shall be recoverable by the lender."

We assure our readers that we have had the above extract carefully read over with an authentic copy of the amended bill, purchased at the Parliamentary Papers Office, and that it is correct to a letter. The rest of the bill is unaltered, except by the substitution in the 6th clause of three months for a year, as the period during which the lender is to be liable to account to the creditors for receipts on account of principal, profits, or interest. It is proposed, then, by the promoters of the amended bill—

1. That if a business is carried on by A. with B.'s capital, B. receiving nine-tenths of the profits, and agreeing to bear nine-tenths of the losses, A. and B. shall not be partners.

2. That if A. manage the business of B. as his agent, factor, or servant, receiving a share of the profits, A. and B. shall not be partners.

3. That if, in case No. 1, B. also manages the business for A. under the name of his servant or agent, in consideration of a further share of profits, A. and B. shall still not be partners, unless, indeed, Lord Brougham's reasoning in Upfill's case should be adopted and applied.

4. That no partner shall have any remedy for money which he brings into the concern on the terms of sharing profits in proportion to the amount of his advances, unless within ten days after making the advance he publishes the particulars to the world.

Very well. It is a rule of law, that if a debt is contracted by A. in the due course of his trade, while B. is a partner with him in that trade, B. is liable to be sued by the creditor for the debt; and the bill does not interfere with that rule. Now, suppose the bill passed into a law, and that a creditor, having supplied goods to A., the manager of a business, under the notion that A. and B. are partners, seeks payment from A. and B., how is he to prove B.'s liability? Under the old rule he had only to prove that B. shared or was entitled to share the profits, or that B. held himself out as partner, or as having an interest in the business; in other words, that he either really was a partner, (taking part in the adventure, or parting or dividing the profits), or that he assumed to be so. But we are no longer to look to the substance of the transaction, and must seek other tests. What are they? We will suppose that the creditor can prove that B. told him that he had an interest in the business, (which, indeed, B. could not deny with truth, for being entitled to a share in the profits is certainly an interest in the business); that B. was frequently in the counting-house, looking over and making up the books, (a proceeding necessary to his own security); that there was in existence a deed of covenant between A. and B., containing, not indeed the word "partner" or "partnership," but stipulations that A. should carry on the business; that B. should furnish the whole of the capital for a certain period; that B. should have a share of the profits, and bear a like share of the losses; that consequently, if at the end of the term, or before if the business were sooner discontinued, the capital or any part of it should have been lost, A. should not be personally liable to repay the loan; that A. should keep proper accounts, and produce all accounts and vouchers to B.; that an annual balance should be taken; that the business should be confined to —; that on the termination of the loan the whole of the stock-in-trade and credits should be converted into money, and the surplus proceeds left after repaying B.'s capital should be divided. These are the principal provisions in an ordinary partnership deed. These would clearly not render B. a partner under the proposed law; and if these would not, we do not see how such minor ancillary stipulations as the following could do so:—That the business should be carried on at M., under the firm of Y.; that without B.'s consent A. should not draw more than £— per month for his own use, nor engage in any other trade, nor hire or dismiss any servant, nor give credit to any person beyond £—, nor become bail, &c.; that on the expiration of the term A. should take all the assets at a valuation, and give B. his bond for payment of his capital and share of profits. But we have now stated all the ordinary provisions of a partnership deed, except the formal one that the parties will be partners. What circumstances, then, must the creditor prove to establish the liability of B.? What circumstances must exist to enable B. himself to know whether he is a partner or not? We have exhausted every substantial circumstance, and are at a loss to imagine any formal one of sufficient significance. The framers of the bill have not completed their task. Having repealed the known definition and tests of partnership, without, as it appears, intending to abolish the thing, and the notion of it, altogether, it is incumbent on them to say, in express terms, what they mean in future to be partnership, and by what sign it is to be known. B. may share in the profits of a business, agree to bear the losses, assist in the conduct of its exercise control over it, and yet not be a partner—we were about to say not a trader, but recollected the 65th section of the Bankrupt-law Consolidation Act, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, which includes in the definition of trader "all persons who either for themselves, or as agents or factors for others, seek their living by buying and selling," &c. What, then, is in future to make these sharers in profits partners—to change the mere mechanical mixture into a chemical combination? Must we have more "magic of words"—add "partners" to the list of words, such as "heirs," "exchange," &c., which have no legal synonyms? Must the parties say, in so many words, either on parchment or orally, that they will be partners; and, having said so, may they the next day agree between themselves with effect that they will no longer be partners? May B., when sued for a debt contracted by A. for the common benefit, give in evidence a conversation on Monday, the 9th, in which an oral agreement for partnership entered into on Saturday, the 7th, was orally rescinded?

Questions similar to those we have suggested in the case of a creditor would arise on a dispute between the—(language fails us in the attempt to reason about this bill)—sharers of profits themselves. We have pursued this line of observation far enough. Let us now turn to the operation of the 3rd section.

The 3rd section provides, that no person who lends money to any other person or partnership, on the terms of receiving a portion of the profits of the business carried on by such person or partnership, shall be entitled to recover the loan, unless he registers certain particulars within ten days after it is made. His right to recover the interest or profits is made the subject of a separate provision, namely, that the interest or profits shall not be recoverable if any material omission or misstatement is made in any of the prescribed particulars. This seems to imply, either that a material omission in the particulars will not, or that an immaterial omission will, destroy the right to recover the loan itself. Then there is no definition of "money." Does it include money's worth? If it include money's worth, does it apply to the sale of goods on credit? And if not, does it include cheques, bills of exchange, stock, shares, &c.? But we are concerned rather with the general scope than with the details of the provision. No one may lend money on the terms of sharing in profits, without publishing the particulars of the loan to the world! A partner who brings in "money" (whatever that word may include) forfeits all right to it unless he registers the loan within ten days. Why? We turn to the words of the advocates of limited liability for the reply, and we find, among those of the most eminent among them, the following passages in praise of non-interference with private dealings:—

"If ever there was a rule established by reason, authority, and experience, it is that the interest of a community is best consulted by leaving to its members, as far as possible, the unrestrained and unfettered exercise of their own talents and industry." (Mr. Bramwell, Appendix to Mercantile Commission Report, p. 23).

"It is, above all, with reference to the improvement and elevation of the working classes that complete freedom in the conditions of partnership is indispensable." (Mr. John S. Mill, Political Economy, vol. 2, p. 468).

"The general principle of the advisability of allowing perfect freedom in the making of contracts between man and man, only guarding against wilful deception." (Mr. K. D. Hodgson, Appendix to Mercantile Law Report, p. 37).

"The received principle in commercial legislation is to leave people to act for themselves, and not to restrict competition. The burthen of proof lies on those who introduce an exception to this principle in favour of large capitalists, and maintain that the law should interfere by prohibitive enactments on behalf of those best able to take care of themselves." (Mr. Robert Lowe, Id., p. 84). And so forth.

The alterations made in the Limited Liability Bill are in matters of detail, and do not call for special comment. We have already discussed the scheme of that bill.

We said, when these bills were first promised by the Government, that the bursting of the limited liability bubble was at hand; that no competent draftsman could make the attempt to embody in law any scheme of limited liability that would satisfy the advocates of the measure, without perceiving that the thing was impracticable, and declining the task; and that when at length a draftsman had been found incompetent or reckless enough to do the job, his handiwork would contain a compendious and conclusive demonstration of the inherent absurdity of his instructions. The repeated delays in the production of the bills, and the bills now that we have them, justify our anticipations.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

THE resignation of Mr. Justice Maule, and the appointment of Mr. J. S. Willes as his successor, have been the principal subjects of professional interest during the past week. The learned judge who has retired after sixteen years of judicial service was one of the most eminent lawyers that ever adorned the Bench, and it is to be hoped that the public will not altogether be deprived of his services, but that, like Sir John Patteson, he will continue to give them the benefit of his great experience and learning in a less arduous, though not less honourable, office than that which he has resigned. With regard to his successor, the public and the profession have reason to be fully satisfied; although comparatively young, his reputation is already established as one of our soundest lawyers, as a man of great and general information, and as one who has done good service in promoting useful reforms in the law.

The following gentlemen have been made Queen's Counsel:—C. S. Whitmore, Esq., (Oxford Circuit); W. Overend, Esq., P. A. Pickering, Esq., and James P. Wilde, Esq., (Northern Circuit); and W. Bovill, Esq., (Home Circuit).

C. Temple, Esq., Q. C., succeeds J. W. Wing, Esq., as County Court Judge of Northamptonshire.

The Queen has been pleased to grant to Travers Twiss, D.C.L., the office of Professor of Civil Law in the University of Oxford, in the room of Dr. Joseph Phillimore, deceased.

We regret to announce the death of John Venn Prior, Esq., of the Chancery Bar, who expired last week in consequence of injuries caused by a fall from a horse. Although he had only attained the age of forty-three, he had long enjoyed a very extensive professional practice, and he was deservedly considered one of the leading members of the outer Bar. He was as much esteemed for his kind heart and amiable disposition as he was respected and admired for those higher mental endowments which had raised him to the position which he occupied.

The Court of Exchequer Chamber (June 30) have affirmed the judgments of the Court of Exchequer in Watts v. Rees, (8 Exch. 696), deciding that in an action by an administrator for a debt due to him as such, the defendant cannot plead a set-off of money due to him from the intestate in his lifetime; and in Giles v. Jones, (10 Exch. 119), deciding that a contract for the sale of a certain number of tons of iron by the ton "long weight" is valid, and not rendered illegal by the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63, or the 5 Geo. 4, c. 74.

FIRST REPORT OF THE COUNTY COURTS COMMISSION.

Judgment Summons.

Judgment Summonses to be issued in the Home or Foreign District, at Discretion of Judge.—At present a judgment summons must issue in the district within which a judgment debtor is resident, although the judgment may not have been pronounced in that district. This appears to be a hardship upon the successful party; but, on the other hand, the power to bring the defendant from one part of the kingdom to the other to answer his creditor might be used vexatiously.

We therefore recommend, that where the defendant resides out of the district in which the judgment was obtained, it shall be competent for the judgment creditor, by leave of the judge, if he shall think fit to grant such leave, to summon the judgment debtor to the court in which the judgment was obtained.

Certificate under Bankrupt, Insolvent, or Protection Act to bar a Judgment Summons.—By law, a certificate under the Bankrupt Laws, a discharge under the Insolvent Act, or a protection under the Protection Acts, does not relieve any one from a commitment upon a judgment in the county court.

We are of opinion, that as such proceedings would operate as a bar to proceedings in respect of all other debts, it is only just they should have a similar effect on a judgment in the county court.

Prisons.

With reference to the gaol to which defaulters may be committed, we think some alteration in the law may be beneficially made.

By the present law the defaulter must be committed to the county gaol, or to some other place of confinement sanctioned for that purpose by the Secretary of State. It sometimes occurs that the county gaol, or that authorised by the Secretary of State, is much farther from the court than the gaol belonging to an adjoining county. Thus, Horsemonger-lane Gaol, which is in the county of Surrey, is but a short distance from the County Court of Kent at Greenwich, while the county gaol, which is at Maidstone, is more than thirty miles distant. Considerable expense and inconvenience are caused by conveying the defaulter so great a distance.

Defaulter should be sent to Gaol nearest Court.—We recommend, therefore, that he should be committed to the gaol nearest to the court, whether it be situated in the county in which the court is held, or in a neighbouring county, but that in the latter case the prisoner should be supported at the expense of the county within which the court is held.

Judgment by Default.

At present (as appears at p. 216) the practice of judgment by default, properly so called, does not exist in the county court; but in the event of the defendant not appearing, on proof of proper service of the process, the cause is tried as undefended. The objection to this practice is, that it compels the plaintiff to prove his case at the hearing, instead of taking his judgment for the whole amount claimed, as in an action for the recovery of a debt in the superior court. This is, in a few instances, productive of some inconvenience to plaintiffs.

Not desirable in Proceedings for Claims not exceeding 20l.—But with respect to claims in amounts not exceeding 20l., we do not think any ultimate advantage would be obtained by interfering with the present practice.

Desirable in larger Amounts, and Parties should be permitted to serve Summons themselves.—With regard to sums above 20l., where the claim is founded on contract, as the defendants are of the same class as those sued in the superior courts, and as that jurisdiction is concurrent with that of the superior courts, we think that the practice of judgment by default might be beneficially introduced, provided that the service of the process be personal, and proper notice of the consequences of not appearing be given in the summons.

In these cases we think that the plaintiffs should be permitted to serve the summons, without the intervention of the bailiff.

Conclusion.

Proceedings convenient.—In conclusion, we may observe that the proceedings and practice in the county court appear to us to be convenient for the purpose of exercising the jurisdiction with which it is invested, as they are simple, prompt, and inexpensive.

Rules made by Committee of County Court Judges, which are not strictly applicable to increased Jurisdiction.—With regard to the body of rules already mentioned, (see ante, p. 216), which was framed by a committee of county court judges, and supervised by a chief justice and two other judges of the superior courts, under the authority of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 101, s. 12, it appears to us that they have been useful, and have tended to secure uniformity in the practice of the county courts.

Since the above rules were framed, the jurisdiction of the county courts has been extended to a variety of matters which are not specifically provided for by the practice; and therefore, when it is sought to apply any practice with reference to those matters, it can be at present only by analogy. This, in many instances, is found to be inconvenient.

Additional Rules recommended.—We recommend, therefore, that additional rules should be framed, which shall be specifically applicable to the matters of extended jurisdiction, and that facilities of procedure, similar to those existing in the superior courts, should be introduced into the county court.

The power of making rules has been vested in a committee of county court judges appointed by the Chancellor, in pursuance of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 54, s. 1.

Continuance of Powers of Committee recommended for that Purpose.—We think it desirable that the powers of that committee should be continued, subject to the same supervision as already provided by law. The effect of this will be to prevent in a great degree the differences of practice likely to arise in 500 co-ordinate courts, and to secure as far as possible conformity between the practice of those courts and that of the superior tribunals.

No additional charge will be brought upon the revenue by the continuance of the powers of the committee, as the judges of whom it consists act without remuneration.

Further Scale of Fees recommended.—We think that a scale of fees applicable to the matters not within the ordinary jurisdiction of the court for the recovery of pecuniary demands should be established, in order that all persons availing themselves of the tribunal may contribute proportionately to its support, so long as it is not maintained at the public expense.

FEEs.

We next proceed to consider the subject of fees.

We will inquire, first, whether the amount raised by fees paid in the county courts can be levied in a manner less burthensome to the suitors; and, secondly, whether that amount can be properly reduced.

Fees may be levied in a less burthensome Manner.—I.—We think that the amount of the fees now levied in the county courts may be raised in a manner less burthensome to the suitors.

Before stating the alterations we propose with reference to fees, it is desirable to give a short statement of the origin of the present scale, embraced in the first and second classes above mentioned. (See ante, p. 260).

Origin of present Scale.—By the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 37, it was provided, that certain fees, mentioned in Schedule (D.) to that act, should be taken for the benefit of the judges, clerks, and high bailiffs, irrespective of the general fund fee, which was established by sect. 52 of the same act, and is applicable to different purposes. By sect. 37, a power was reserved to one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, with the consent of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, to alter, but not to increase, the fees mentioned in the schedule to the act. A similar power was contained in sect. 52, with reference to the general fund fee. (See ante, p. 261). More extensive powers of altering the fees were afterwards conferred on the same authorities by the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 101, s. 6.

Complaints of former Scale.—Soon after the establishment of the courts, many complaints were made by the suitors, both of the scale mentioned in the schedule, and of the contribution to the general fund. The principal objections to the then existing scale were—

First, that the amount of fees, including the first and second classes, was excessive:

Secondly, that the language of the schedule was so vague that the officers were enabled to take more fees than the Legislature intended:

Thirdly, that as the amounts in respect of which the fees were to be taken rose only by four steps, from 1*l.* to 20*l.*, the suitor who claimed 2*l.* 1*s.* was compelled to pay as much as he who claimed 5*l.*, and the suitor who claimed 10*l.* 1*s.* was compelled to pay as much as he who claimed 20*l.*

Reference to fees County Court Judges.—In the year 1850 a Secretary of State and the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, in consequence of these complaints, determined to exercise the powers with which they were invested under the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 101, s. 6, and the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 52, to alter the amount of fees taken in the county courts; and the committee of county court judges appointed by the Chancellor, in pursuance of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 101, s. 12, were requested to consider the matter, and to frame a scale of fees in conformity with their views, on the principle, that, having regard to the average amount of the business in the courts, the fees, including the general fund fee, should produce a sufficient revenue to support the whole of the establishment and its incidents, with the exception of the salaries of the treasurers, which were by sect. 23 of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, expressly charged upon the Consolidated Fund.

No interference with the third, fourth, or fifth class of fees (ante, p. 261) was suggested to the committee, and the law with respect to them remains unaltered.

Suitors relieved to the Extent of One-seventh of the Annual Revenue.—As to the first objection, the committee proposed that the suitors should be relieved to the extent of one-seventh of the total amount of the revenue produced by the fees. It was suggested, that, by analogy to other taxes, a diminution in the amount of the fees would produce a corresponding increase of business, and consequent increase of revenue, and therefore that no permanent loss would result from the proposed reduction. The Government consented to undertake the risk of the non-productiveness of the court, and accordingly the committee were requested to frame a scale on the principle of such a reduction. The scale now in force was accordingly made, and came into full operation at the beginning of the year 1851.

Deficiency supplied.—The anticipations of the committee were fulfilled. The revenue of 1850 was 252,000*l.* Assuming that the same amount of business continued in the courts, the revenue of 1851, after the diminution of one-seventh, or 36,000*l.*, would have fallen to 216,000*l.* By the returns of the year 1851, however, it appears that the total revenue of that year was 272,000*l.* This increased productiveness cannot be attributed entirely to the principle suggested by the committee, as the sum of 36,000*l.* appears by the returns to have been produced by business resulting from the extended jurisdiction over claims not exceeding 50*l.*, which in the year 1851 came into force. Still, however, the remaining sum of 20,000*l.*, beyond the anticipated 216,000*l.*, was fairly attributable to the above-mentioned principle; and in the following year the revenue continued to increase.

General Fund Fee diminished.—In the formation of the scale the committee abolished some fees, and reduced the amount of others; and with regard to the general fund, the fee of 1*s.* in the pound on claims exceeding 40*s.* was reduced to 8*d.* The exemption of sums not exceeding 20*s.*, and the fee of 6*d.* in the pound on sums not exceeding 40*s.*, were left as by law provided.

Scale made less vague.—The second objection, founded on the vague language of Schedule (D.), was removed, by employing the language in which the present scale is expressed. From the inquiries we have been enabled to make, we have not discovered any reason for supposing that the intentions of the framers of the scale have not been fulfilled, as it does not appear that any other fees than those strictly sanctioned by the scale have been taken.

*Progressive Increase of Fees; not beyond 20*l.—The third objection, as to the sudden rises in the scale with reference to the amounts of claims, was met by substituting a scale in which the amounts of the suitors' respective claims were treated as the basis for calculating the fee according to an arithmetical progression, increasing by 1*l.* from the sum of 1*l.* to 20*l.* inclusive.

Reasons.—It will be observed that in the above scale the progression stops at 20*l.* If it continued beyond 20*l.*, to claims as high as 50*l.*, the fees would have been so great as probably to exclude that class of business from the court, and so far prevent the revenue from recovering from the loss which the diminution of fees had caused.

Principles of Scale.—The principles of the above scale, independent of the reduction of amounts, appear to be, that as the suitors were to be compelled to support the court by paying for the use of it, they should pay in proportion to that use; and as the court was peculiarly the poor man's court, the poorer suitors should pay less than the richer ones.

Principle correct, but Alterations in detail necessary.—The answers to the inquiries we have made on this subject satisfy us, that if the courts are to be rendered self-supporting, this scale is in principle correct; although certain fees, which are hereafter referred to, have been shewn by more extended experience to be unnecessarily burthensome to the suitor.

Fees may be levied in a less burthensome Manner.—We will now point out how the scale in force, supposing the present amount of revenue to be required from the courts, may be rendered less burthensome to the suitors.

*Mileage on Service and Execution exchanged for fixed Fee of additional 1*d.* in the Pound.*—One of the most burthensome fees which a suitor is called upon to pay is the mileage fee to the bailiff in respect of serving and executing the process of the court. As this fee is paid to the bailiff in respect of his greater labour in travelling to perform his duty, it is equally applicable to the lowest and the highest amount of claim. Such a fee, so far as the bailiff is concerned, is just; but so far as the suitor is affected, is unjust. It compels a plaintiff to pay more or less for the service of his process, according to the accidental circumstance of the distance which his debtor resides from the court. The principle of local jurisdiction is, that in each district, so far as possible, every suitor should have his remedy brought to his own home. This is an object, however, which, though desirable, it is impossible completely to attain, but we think that a greater approximation to its attainment may be made than is effected by the present scale of fees.

We recommend, that in all cases of service or execution of process at a distance from the court the same fee should be paid, whatever that distance may be. This fee should be of such an amount as that, having regard to the average number of services and executions, a total equal to that at present raised should be secured. The high bailiff would then keep an account, in conformity with the mode of calculating distances now existing in the court, of the miles travelled, and at the audit the treasurer should pay over to him a proportionate sum. No danger of fraud upon the treasurer would exist, because the books of the court, disclosing the place of the defendant's residence, and the distance-book of the court, shewing the number of miles to that residence, would afford a complete check. By this means the burthen would be equally divided among all the suitors of the court, the bailiff would be compensated for his extra labour, and the principle of local administration of justice more completely enforced.

From the calculations we have made, it appears, that in lieu of the mileage fee, an additional 1d. in the pound on the sum claimed would produce the required amount. This will be little more than a nominal increase of fee to suitors where the defendant resides near the court, but will be a most important relief of the burthen now imposed in other cases.

Mileage in case of Prisoners, exchanged for fixed Fee of 1s. in the Pound.—Another fee to be found in the existing scale is that of conveying a defaulting party to prison, where he has been committed under the penal clauses of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95. The remarks which we have made with reference to the mileage fee in the case of process are equally applicable to this fee.

We propose, on the same principle, that one fee should be substituted for the mileage fee in such cases, however distant the gaol may be from the court.

The calculations we have made lead us to the conclusion, that a fee of 1s. in the pound on the sum for which the warrant issues would produce the required amount. This alteration would have an effect similar to that produced by the proposed change in the service fee.

It will be seen, that in hereafter considering how far the amount produced by the present fees should be reduced, we propose to abolish all mileage fees, and to remunerate the bailiff, in respect of the distance travelled by him in the performance of his duties, out of the produce of the fees proposed to be retained.

We have already made some observations and suggestions as to the more convenient gaols, with reference to distance, to which defaulters should be committed.

Possession Fee to be calculated on the Value of the Goods seized.—The fee for keeping possession of goods taken in execution until the time of sale we think also requires modification. It will be observed that the poundage is by the present scale calculated on the amount for which the execution issues.

We think that the fee for possession ought to be calculated only on the value of the goods actually seized, but not exceeding the amount mentioned in the warrant, such value to be ascertained and determined, if necessary, by the clerk. This is more consistent with the nature of a fee for possession having relation to value. In many instances that which is taken into possession is of less value than the amount on which the fee is calculated. In such cases, whether the loss fall upon the plaintiff or the defendant, injustice is the result. In the majority of instances, however, the loss falls upon the plaintiff, as the fees are a prior charge upon the goods seized, and consequently the fruits of the execution are less capable of satisfying the plaintiff's demand.

Recovery of Tenements.—The fee on proceedings for the recovery of tenements we think also requires modification. At present it is paid upon the annual rent or value of the tenement sought to be recovered.

Fee to be regulated by Term of Letting.—We think that the fee should be regulated by the rent or value for the term of demise, whatever that may be, not exceeding one year. Thus, if the premises are demised for a week, month, or other period less than a year, fees only in proportion to the amount of the rent or value for that term should be taken, such value to be determined, if necessary, by the clerk.

Replevin.—The fee payable on proceedings in replevin we think should also be altered. At present it is regulated by the amount distrained for; whereas, from the nature of replevin itself, which seeks to recover things distrained, the value of the things so distrained ought, on the principle of poundage, to regulate the amount of fees payable.

Fee to be calculated by Value of Goods.—We recommend, therefore, that the fee in replevin should be payable in proportion to the value of the goods distrained, such value to be ascertained and determined, if necessary, by the clerk. This and the last-mentioned fee we propose should be subject to the restriction mentioned in the scale with reference to 20l.

Jurisdiction by Consent.—In cases of jurisdiction by consent, under sect. 17 of the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, the fees are at present calculated on the sum of 50l.

Fees to be calculated on 20l. only.—We think that in claims, where the parties may, by consent, give jurisdiction to the county court, under the above section, the fees should not be calculated upon a greater amount than that of 20l. The number of cases under the consent clause tried in the county courts has been exceedingly small, and therefore the diminution of revenue in consequence of lessening the fees in question must be almost nominal, and not sufficient, therefore, to justify an exception to the general rule, that the fees should not be calculated on a greater amount than 20l.

Appraisement Fee to be continued, but Appraisement conducted differently.—The fees of the third class are those payable in respect of appraisements on executions under the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95. Where an appraisement takes place on an execution, the appraiser is entitled to 6d. in the pound on the value of the goods for the appraisement of them, besides the stamp duty; and in respect of advertisements, catalogues, sale and commission, and delivery of goods, 1s. in the pound on the net produce of the sale. A difference of opinion exists between some of the persons whom we have consulted as to the propriety of continuing this fee: some are of opinion that appraisement is a useless form; others that it is a useful and necessary check on the proceedings of the bailiff in enforcing executions.

Our judgment is in favour of the latter opinion; but we think that the appraisement ought to be rendered more efficient, by requiring the appraiser to affix a specific price to the different articles to be sold, instead of adopting the present mode, which is in general to put one total amount as the value of the whole property to be sold. By the mode which we propose the practice of selling goods at a sacrifice would be checked, and friends or relatives might be willing to purchase, for the benefit of the defendant or his family, certain articles which are now involved in one common valuation. No difficulty would arise in compelling the persons who act as appraisers to perform their duty in the way suggested, as by law those who act in that character are appointed by the high bailiff, with the written sanction of the judge.

Distresses.—Next, with respect to the fourth class of fees, which are receivable by the bailiff in respect of distresses made after notice of rent due, when executions are levied. By adopting the provisions of the 57 Geo. 3, c. 93, which now regulate those fees, injustice is done to the tenant where a small amount of rent is distrained for, and to the bailiff where a large amount is claimed.

Fees to be calculated as on Executions.—We think that the fees on distresses would be more properly calculated on the same scale as in executions. By adopting the principle applied in executions, the fee being proportionate to the amount, the objections we have stated would be obviated.

Alterations produce Increase of Revenue.—From the inquiries we have made, we are led to believe that the alterations we have suggested in the existing fees would be productive of an increase of the revenue produced by the courts.

II.—Whether the amount of fees can properly be reduced.

County Court should not be entirely self-supporting, but Fees sufficient to pay Clerks and High Bailiffs should be taken.—We now proceed to consider a question which is preliminary, but essential to this branch of the inquiry—that is, whether the county courts should be self-supporting. We are of opinion that they should not. To compel the suitors to pay fees sufficient to support the establishment appears to us unjust in principle, as that which is for the benefit of the public should be supported by the public; but we fear that at present financial reasons will render it impracticable to reduce the fees in strict conformity with the principles we have enunciated. We think, therefore, that the suitors should pay an amount of contribution sufficient to remunerate the clerks and high bailiffs of the court, and that all other expenses of the establishment, such as judges' salaries, buildings, stationery, and other matters, should be borne by the public revenue.

Proposed Scale adopts Progression of existing one, and abolishes or modifies certain Fees.—We have prepared a scale relating to the first and second class of fees, which, assuming the present amount of business of the courts to continue, will produce a sum equal to the present amount of remuneration received by the officers we have mentioned.

In the scale we propose, the general principle of the existing scale, so far as the gradual increase in proportion to the amount of demand is concerned, is adopted.

The fees which we propose to abolish or modify are as follows:—

FEE ANNUM.

First, to abolish the general fund fee, which will have the effect of relieving the suitors to the extent of .	£37,000 0 0
Secondly, to modify the hearing fee, where the parties consent to a judgment. At present the fee payable on a judgment to which the defendant consents is the same in amount as that payable on a judgment where the claim has been disputed and the cause tried. We propose to reduce that fee from 2s. 3d. in the pound, the fee now paid, to 1s. in the pound on the amount of the claim. This would relieve such suitors to the amount of about	18,000 0 0
Thirdly, to abolish the fees on payment of money into and out of court, and on notice of payment into court, now producing the sum of about ...	14,000 0 0
Fourthly, to discontinue the bailiff's mileage fee on serving and executing process. This fee produces about ...	15,000 0 0
Fifthly, to discontinue the bailiff's mileage fee on conveying defaulting parties to prison. That fee now produces about	4,000 0 0

The bailiff, we propose, should be paid, in proportion to the distance travelled by him in serving or executing process, or conveying committed parties, out of the fund which the remaining fees produce, in the manner already suggested.

Sixthly, to abolish the fees on issuing a judgment summons, which now produce about	4,500 0 0
Fees on the hearing of the same ...	4,500 0 0
Fees on new trials	200 0 0
Fees on special defences	500 0 0
Fees on adjournments, which now produce about	1,200 0 0
Fees on subpoenas	2,200 0 0
Fees on applications for leave to sue out of the district	2,000 0 0
Fees to the high bailiff for issuing warrant to the clerk of another court	700 0 0
Seventhly, we further recommend that the summons and service fees, together amounting to 8d. in the pound, should be reduced to 6d.; and the hearing and service of order fees, together amounting to 2s. 3d. in the pound, should be reduced to 2s. This will have the effect of diminishing the produce of these fees by about .	21,000 0 0
	£124,800 0 0

Proposed Scale relieves Suitors to Extent of about One-half of present Revenue.—The total of the sums produced annually by the fees which we propose to discontinue or reduce is rather less than one-half of the present annual amount (253,518*l.*) levied on suitors.

But not interfere with Bailiffs' and Appraisers' Fees.—With the third and fourth classes of fees, which are received by the bailiffs and appraisers, we do not propose to interfere, except by the alterations already suggested.

Insolvency and Protection Fees to remain as they are.—The fees in insolvency and protection cases are of a special and occasional nature, and therefore cannot conveniently be made part of a general scheme of fees of court. Besides, the duties performed by the officers are in many respects of a nature different from those devolving on them in other matters. When we consider the jurisdiction in insolvency and protection cases, it may probably be found desirable to modify the present scale, and to define more strictly the fees to be taken.

The payment of 5s. to the jury we propose should continue.

With the above-suggested modifications and diminutions, the following will be the proposed

TABLE OF FEES to be taken in the County Courts established by the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95.

For every plaint, 6d. in the pound on the amount of the demand.

Notice.—No other fee whatever is to be taken on the entry of a plaint.

Judgments by consent under the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, ss. 8, 9, and judgments by default, 1s. in the pound on the amount of the demand.

For every hearing, 2s. in the pound on the amount of the demand.

Notice.—No other fee whatever is to be taken for the hearing or trial of a cause.

For issuing any warrant against the body or goods, 1s. 6d. in the pound on the amount for which such warrant issues.

For application for new trial, or to set aside proceedings, 6d. in the pound on the amount of the demand.

Notice.—No other fees than the above to be taken on any account whatever. No increase of fees shall be made by reason of there being more than one plaintiff or defendant.

SIXTEENTH REPORT OF THE UNION BANK OF LONDON.

PRESENT.

Sir PETER LAURIE, Alderman, Governor, in the Chair.
W. M. NURSE, Esq., Deputy Governor.

DIRECTORS.

John Barnes, Esq.
James Farquhar, Esq.
Peter Northall Laurie, Esq.
Charles Lyall, Esq.
John Chapman, Esq.
Henry Hulbert, Esq.

Archibald Boyd, Esq.
Colonel Thomas Matheson.
John Scott, Esq.
Leo Schuster, Esq.
Sir John Muagrove, Bart., Ald.
William Scott Binau, Esq.

And Ninety-four Proprietors.

At a GENERAL MEETING of the PROPRIETORS, held at the Court-room of the Banking House, 2, Princes-street, Mansion-house, on Wednesday, the 11th of July, 1855, the following REPORT was read by the Secretary:—

The Directors have the pleasure of presenting their Sixteenth Annual Report of the affairs of the Bank, from which it will be seen, that after deducting all current expenses, including the sum of 142,092*l.* 1*s.* 1*d.* paid and due to customers for interest on their Current and Deposit Accounts, the net Profits of the year ending the 30th June last amount to 139,967*l.* 9*s.* 10*d.*

The Directors have much satisfaction in declaring a Dividend for the last Six Months of 5 per cent., and a Bonus of 7½ per cent., making, with the Dividend and Bonus paid in January last, 20 per cent. for the past year, viz. 10 per cent. Dividend, and 10 per cent. Bonus clear of Income Tax.

After payment of the Dividend and Bonus for the year, amounting to 119,511*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, there will remain an unappropriated Surplus Profit of 20,456*l.* 2*s.* 4*d.*, to be carried to the credit of Profit and Loss New Account, for Rebate of Interest on Bills not yet due, Income Tax, &c.

Gratifying as it is to the Directors to be able to declare so large a Bonus in addition to the Annual Dividend of 10 per cent., the Proprietors must bear in mind that this great amount of profit does not arise wholly from the increase of business during the past year, (large as that increase has been), but that the high rate at which money ruled during the greater part of the last twelve months has also materially contributed to this result. The amount, therefore, of the future Bonus must be dependent in a great degree on the state of the Money Market.

In conformity with the announcement made at the last Annual Meeting, the Reserved Shares were issued in July, 1854, at a premium of 5*l.* per Share, producing the sum of 261,680*l.*; of this amount 177,100*l.* have been added to the Capital, which now amounts to 600,000*l.*; and the additional sum of 84,580*l.*, arising from such Premium, has been appropriated by adding 70,000*l.* to the Reserved Fund, now amounting to 120,000*l.*; by the entire liquidation of the preliminary expenses, amounting to 8500*l.*; and by carrying the balance of 6080*l.* to the part payment of the extension of the premises at this Office and at the Regent-street Branch.

For some years past the Directors have been urged by influential members of the Legal Profession to open a Branch in the neighbourhood of the Inns of Court, but the reluctance which they have felt to multiply Branches induced them to postpone the adoption of such a course. The suggestion having been again pressed upon the Directors in consequence of recent events, they have established a Branch near Temple-bar, which holds out every prospect that the security afforded by the Joint-stock principle, and the advantages offered by the terms of this Bank, will be duly appreciated in that locality.

In pursuance of the provisions of the Deed of Settlement, the following Directors retire by rotation, viz.—

HENRY HULBERT, Esq.,
COLONEL THOMAS MATHESON, and
ARCHIBALD BOYD, Esq.,

but, being eligible, they offer themselves, and are recommended by the Court, for re-election.

ADVANTAGES TO THE ASSURED.

1. Four-fifths of the Profits are divided triennially amongst the Assured.

In some Offices the Assured may not be entitled to a Bonus until the expiration of ten years from the time of effecting the Policy, whilst in this Office three years is the utmost limit.

2. At the first division of Profits in May, 1853, a Reversionary Bonus, averaging 454 per cent., was declared on all Participating Policies. In some cases the Bonus exceeded 614 per cent. on the premiums paid.

On reference to the Prospectuses of some of the principal Offices, it will be found that the Bonus on their first division was much less, viz. 284 per cent.

3. The next division of Profits will be declared in May, 1856, when all Policies effected in 1855 will participate.

In most Offices Assurers do not participate in the Profits until after payment of from three to five annual premiums, but in this Office they may participate on payment of a single premium.

ADVANTAGES TO THE PROFESSION.

A Commission of 104 per cent. is allowed on the first year's premium, and 51 per cent. annually afterwards; and, as an additional advantage to persons introducing business, the Shareholders have by the Deed of Settlement given up half of their Profits for the benefit of such persons as extra Commission.

The extra Commission paid in 1853 to persons introducing business was as follows:—

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JULY 21, 1855.

THE important question, how far the declarations of a deceased tenant, derogating from the title of the landlord, are admissible in evidence against the latter, was recently discussed in the case of Papendick v. Bridgewater, (1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 657). That was an action for driving the plaintiff's sheep off a common, and the point in issue was, whether the plaintiff was entitled to right of common in respect of his farm. It appeared that this farm had been occupied from 1791 until 1816 by a tenant named Clement Probert, since deceased, and that during his tenancy, and a few years before it, the sheep of the farm used the common. The defendant then sought to give in evidence a declaration made by Probert, to the effect that he had no right to depasture the sheep on such common. This evidence was offered on the ground that it was a declaration against the interest of the party making it, and consequently admissible against the reversioner and all the world. Crompton, J., however, rejected the declaration, on the ground that it did not accompany any act; and this ruling was subsequently upheld by the Court of Queen's Bench.

In order to arrive at this result it was necessary to overrule the case of Walker v. Broadstock, (1 Esp. 458), in which Thompson, B., received a tenant's declaration, that he had no right of common, as evidence against the reversioner.

This case being removed, both principle and authority were in favour of the ultimate decision of the Court. It would be extremely dangerous to allow a tenant by his mere declarations to affect the property of others, to cut down the estate, to deprive it of an easement or profit, or to impose a servitude upon it. "Declarations of deceased persons," said Lord Campbell, C. J., "when admitted in evidence, are exceptions from the general rules of evidence, because they are not on oath, and are not tested by cross-examination. . . . This declaration did not relate to a matter of reputation, nor was it sought to be admitted on the supposition that there was privity of estate, because the tenant is not privy in estate to the reversioner; where there is privity of estate, it would be receivable, whether the declarant were alive or dead. It was powerfully argued that any declaration of a deceased person on a subject with which he is acquainted, if contrary to the interest of the declarant, is evidence against all the world. That is true as an exception to the general rule; but to that exception there is an exception, that we cannot admit a declaration by a tenant which derogates from the title of the landlord under whom he claims." Erle, J., strictly limited his judgment to the facts then before the Court. "I carefully distinguish the declaration in question," said that learned judge, "from a declaration accompanying an act of user, or an act of interruption. The declaration rejected was a declaration as to the abstract right. This does not come within any of the exceptions which have been introduced for general convenience, such as entries made in the discharge of legal duty, as in Furdon v. Clogg, (10 M. & W. 572), or in the course of business; or, what is more apposite, declarations binding privies, or declarations of occupiers presumed prima facie to be owners, and tending to diminish their prima facie estate in fee, by shewing under whom they held, and upon what terms." With regard to declarations against interest being evidence against all the world, his Lordship expressed an opinion that the language used to that effect in some of the decisions should be limited to the class of cases in which the declarant has a pecuniary or proprietary interest. (See The Sussex Peerage case, 11 Cl. & Fin. 85).

The previous authorities upon the subject are to the same effect. Thus a declaration by a tenant, that he was not entitled to use a right of way except by permission, was rejected as evidence against the reversioner by Patteson, J., in Tickle v. Brown, (4 Ad. & El. 369, 373). So was a declaration that the land was subject to an easement, or that there was a public way over it; (Scholes v. Chadwick, 2 Moo. & R. 507; Reg. v. Bliss, 7 Ad. & El. 556); and even acts of acquiescence on the part of the tenant have been held inadmissible as against the landlord. (Daniel v. North, 11 East, 372; Wood v. Veal, 5 B. & Al. 454).

This subject is further discussed, and the cases upon it collected, in the notes to Higham v. Ridgway, (2 Smith's L. C. 183, 196 a); Best's Prin. Ev. 577, 2nd ed.; and Tayl. Ev. 545, 2nd ed.

We may here notice a question which we have heard mooted, whether the statute removing interest as a ground of incompetency on the part of living witnesses has effected any alteration with regard to the declarations of deceased persons against interest. We apprehend that it has not, because it is still an objection to the credibility of testimony. The reason why the declaration of a deceased person, made against interest, is admitted, is because of the probability of its being credible; and the tendency of the Courts is to restrain the existing exceptions on this subject within their old boundaries. It may also be observed, that it is not necessary, in order that declarations against interest should be received in evidence, that the declarant should have been competent, if living, to testify to the facts mentioned in the declaration. (Gleadow v. Atkin, 1 Cr. & M. 410, 423, 424; Short v. Lee, 2 J. & W. 489).

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

A bust of the late Mr. Justice Talfourd has just been placed in the Crown Court, Stafford. The base of the monumental tablet in which it is placed bears the following inscription:—

"On the Judgment-seat of this Court,

While addressing the Grand Jury,

DIED

SIR THOMAS NOON TALFOURD, Knt., D.C.L.,

One of the Judges of the Court of Common Pleas,

An accomplished Orator, Lawyer, and Poet.

The Members of the Oxford Circuit

Erected this Memorial

Of their regard and admiration

For their former leader, companion, and friend."

Mr. Arnold, the magistrate, has decided, as our readers might have expected, that the mere breaking of windows during the recent Sunday riots was not the offence contemplated by stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 31, which enables parties to claim against the hundred for damage done. The riot must be of a felonious character—e.g. involving the demolition, or commencement of the demolition, of a house. In the latter case there must be an intent to demolish the whole dwelling. (See stats. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, s. 8, and 4 & 5 Vict. c. 56, s. 2; Reg. v. Howell, 9 Car. & P. 437; and Reg. v. Thomas, 4 Car. & P. 337).

The following is a list of the total number of criminals committed in England and Wales, (and not bailed), for crimes triable only at the assizes, during the months of January, April, May, June, September, October, November, and December, in 1854:—

Home Circuit	78
Midland	157
Norfolk	61
Northern	144
Oxford	161
Western	120
North Wales and Chester	72
South Wales and Chester	9

The months omitted are February and March, and July and August, during which the assizes are held. A winter assize is also held at York and Liverpool.

The Right Hon. J. A. Stuart Wortley, (Recorder of London), R. B. Armstrong, Esq., (Recorder of Manchester), and Gilbert Henderson, Esq., (Recorder of Liverpool), have been appointed commissioners for inquiring into the Hyde Park disturbance on Sunday, the 1st instant, and the conduct of the metropolitan police in connexion therewith. The learned commissioners have been sitting during this week in the Court of Exchequer at Westminster.

THE NEW JUDGE.

[From "The Examiner."]

A more praiseworthy judicial appointment has seldom been made than that of Mr. James S. Willes to the seat in the Common Pleas vacated by Mr. Justice Maule's retirement.

It may be said (nor in a majority of cases would it be said unfairly) that lawyers of eminence by whom Ministers have been served, who have undergone contested elections, made considerable personal sacrifices, and obtained distinction in Parliament, have the strongest possible title to consideration when the prizes of the Profession fall vacant. For the most part this undoubtedly is so; and where two men are equal in fitness, every rule of sense and feeling should secure precedence for the claim which rests also on party fidelity and public service. But no question of that kind can be raised here. Such is the position of Mr. Willes that the excellence of his appointment turns on the very absence of what, in other circumstances, might have operated to commend it strongly.

It is generally admitted, we believe, that a more striking example of an instinctive aptitude or genius for the law has rarely presented itself in Westminster Hall: it was not simply that a most complete knowledge of cases was early mastered, and applied in practice with astonishing subtlety and success, but that the higher knowledge of principles went hand in hand with those rare and profound acquirements. Lord Tenterden's self-selected motto, "labore," expressed with characteristic simplicity what that great lawyer held to be the source of his elevation; but it would express only partially what the new judge had displayed in a comparatively brief career at the Bar. Mr. Willes had become known for qualities incomparably higher than mere case knowledge or unwearied research, when he was placed five years ago on the Common-law Commission.

The services he rendered in that capacity would alone, in our judgment, have entitled him to the position he has now attained. With nothing of the genius of an orator, he possesses the power and capacity of a legislator. To him we are mainly indebted for suggestions that have overthrown during the last few years, to the inexpressible relief of the poor suitor, the clumsier and more intolerable parts of the monstrous fabric of special pleading. To all the recent improvements in common-law procedure he has largely contributed by his labours on that commission; and we suspect that not a few absurd distinctions between the practice at common law and at equity would by this time have gone the way of other similar follies if all his suggestions then made had been equally successful.

Such a man, so capable, so learned, and with such dispositions, will be invaluable on the Bench; and it is greatly to the honour of Lord Cranworth that he should have set before the Bar an example, so little open to question, of an appointment dictated only by a regard for the public service. The qualities which the Chancellor has had the best means of testing in the new judge are of a higher kind than those which Mr. Willes has had the opportunity himself of most familiarising to the great body of the Profession, but it is in the union of both we find the rare and conspicuous merit of his appointment. Nor is it less honourable to the Profession itself than to the Chancellor that the elevation to a seat in the Common Pleas of a young man of forty, without anything showy or superficially attractive in his talents, and who had not even sought the dignity of a silk gown, should find such general and cordial approval in Westminster Hall.

The truth is, that it is a promotion too manifestly made on the exclusive ground of merit to admit of any fair objection. With nothing to attach him to either party in the State, with only learning and labour to attract influential friends, within a few years utterly unknown, Mr. Willes has forced his way by sheer ability, and been the unsaid architect of his own fortune. He is an Irishman, and so entirely was he without influence or connexion in England, that he would have returned to Dublin seventeen years ago, when he had qualified for his call to the Irish Bar, but for the earnest remonstrance of the distinguished pleader Mr. Chitty, in whose chambers he was then a pupil. He had graduated at Trinity College with great distinction in 1835, and the next five years were passed in Dublin and London alternately, in the chambers of Mr. Chitty or those of Mr. Collins, an Irish barrister of considerable eminence. His course was not decisively taken till June, 1840, when he was called to the English Bar; and perhaps no man ever achieved so rapidly a first-rate practice of so important a kind. Not that the popular impression in this respect is at all the true one, which tells you that great lawyers are wont to starve in their youth, and only to become famous when their wigs cover grey hairs; for the rule rather is, that if a lawyer fails as a young man, he will very rarely indeed succeed as an old one. But it was not merely a large practice speedily obtained in Mr. Willes's case, but a practice in cases of the weightiest kind. Few great questions of mercantile law have been mooted for the last thirteen years without his services on one side or the other, and indeed few have been the important cases of any kind—so sudden and universal became the recognition of his acute judgment and profound acquaintance with the common law—on which some person concerned has not sought his opinion. No elevation to the Bench of a man at once so young and in such extensive practice has taken place since the days of Judge Buller.

Nor is there anything in this admirable appointment of Lord Cranworth's on which the public should be more congratulated than that fact of Mr. Willes's youth. Even ceteris paribus there is a great advantage thus obtained. It has been too much the practice (one of the abominations of Lord Eldon, often imitated since) to put aged men to duties for which age is itself in a great measure the disqualification. It is a disadvantage not in every instance avoidable, and at this day we have too many judges who have passed into the decline of life; but the more should we welcome a case like the present, where the choice falls on one not only able as the best, but both able and youthful. When a lawyer only works his way to the Bench by the time he is sixty, the fact that to entitle him to his pension he must hold the office fifteen years fastens him to his work till he becomes too infirm to perform it as befits his own reputation or the public service. Well is it, therefore, to take advantage of a rare example, when, by vast toil and admitted superiority, the foremost rank has been attained at a comparatively early age. Appointed judge at forty, Mr. Willes will continue, we trust, in the full vigour of his mind and body at the end of fifteen years, and may even then be able to defer for another decade all thought of retirement from his duties.

By such a selection no one will doubt that the public is a gainer. The Government of the day, too, is a gainer, by the credit it obtains for having given the right place to the right man, though he had neither courtly nor political connexions, and though to have passed him over would have started no popular objection. But most of all is his own profession the gainer; in the higher and simpler objects which a promotion on such disinterested grounds is likely to place before those who continue to contend for its prize.

Reviews.

A Treatise on the Law of Railways, Railway Companies, and Railway Investments. With an Appendix, containing all the Statutes, Precedents, &c. By WILLIAM HODGES, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, Recorder of Poole. Second Edition. 1855. [Sweet.]

THIS is a valuable contribution to what may be termed "railway literature," and treats fully of everything that can be required upon the subject by the legal practitioner.

The numerous and important decisions in law and equity since the first edition of the work have been carefully collected, digested, and interwoven with the original texture. The following is an analysis of the principal contents:—First, the statute law applicable to railways, including the formation of railway companies, the course of proceedings upon railway bills in Parliament, the constitution of railway companies and their powers, railway investments, powers to take or injuriously affect lands, compensation, the powers and obligations of railway companies to construct &c. works connected with railways, jurisdiction of the Board of Trade over railways, and obligations imposed by statute upon railway companies; secondly, the rights and liabilities of railway companies as carriers of goods and passengers; thirdly, mandamus and injunctions with respect to such companies; fourthly, the assessment of railways to the poor rate; and, fifthly, the dissolution of railway companies, and the rights of allottees to recover deposits. The Appendix contains the railway statutes at large, and forms of the proceedings in general use.

It may thus be seen at a glance how copious is the volume before us in matters of interest to the legal profession, and to that extensive class of the public who are connected more or less with the railway system of this country. But the author has expended his labours on no mean or petty object—a very giant was before him, and he has grappled with him manfully. After giving tables shewing the progress or retrogression in the construction of railways, the capital invested in them, and the traffic conducted upon them from 1842 to 1852, the author tells us that the grand total shews the outlay of capital to amount to 248,693,553*l.*, expended on 7338 miles of railway, being at the rate of 33,879*l.* per mile. We also learn from the decennial tables that in 1842 the total capital invested in this wide field of enterprise was 52,380,100*l.*, but in 1852 it was no less than 239,967,453*l.* (See p. 45, note (c).) The gross traffic receipts for the United Kingdom in 1853 amounted to 16,706,194*l.* (Id.)

Questions connected with these vast schemes are almost of corresponding magnitude, and sometimes of corresponding complication and difficulty. Witness the fluctuating opinions as to the mode of assessment of railways to the poor rate—a branch of the law which has been said to be surrounded by difficulties in application all but insurmountable.

This question is ably and fully discussed by Mr. Hodges, (pp. 686—724), and he states the following as the result:—"The mode now adopted to ascertain the 'rateable value of a railway is, first, to ascertain the 'gross receipts of the line within the particular parish; 'and then, by making a series of elaborate calculations, 'endeavour to exhaust the proper deductions, so as to 'arrive at a sum which expresses the net rent which a 'tenant from year to year might be expected to give 'for the portion of the railway which is situate in the 'parish raising the rate." (P. 690).

We must content ourselves with one more extract, relating to the question, how far the vendee of shares is bound to procure himself to be registered as the holder, or to indemnify the vendor against calls made subsequently in respect of them. Upon this subject Mr. Hodges says, (p. 122), "If shares are sold, and the 'transfer signed by the vendor, but the vendee neglects to register it, so that the company are entitled 'to demand payment of calls made subsequently to the 'sale from the vendor, whose name remains on the 'register, a bill for specific performance of the contract 'may be maintained by the vendor to compel the vendee to register the transfer and pay the calls". The principle is, that when shares are sold, it must be taken to be part of the contract that the vendor should be indemnified by the purchaser from all liability in respect of subsequent calls made on the shares†.

"So, where certain railway shares were sold by auction, and the purchaser paid his purchase money, but did not take a transfer of the shares, and then sold to a third party, who refused to register himself as owner of the shares, and calls were made on the shares, which were left unpaid, it was held, that the original vendor was entitled to a decree for specific performance against the original purchaser‡. If, through the neglect of the purchaser of shares to register them, the vendor is compelled to pay calls, he cannot recover the money back as money paid to the defendant's use§; although, according to the doctrine laid down in Wynne v. Price, an action on the case for not registering the shares could, it seems, be maintained||."

A Manual of the Practice and Evidence in Actions and other Proceedings in the County Courts; with the Statutes and Rules. By JAMES EDWARD DAVIS, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. Second Edition. [Butterworths, 1855.]

MR. DAVIS has arranged his subject somewhat on the same plan as in Roscoe's Nisi Prius, and his book will be found a very useful manual not only in county courts, but also in the superior tribunals. It commences with the proceedings and practice in actions in the county courts, from the plaint to the execution: this is followed by the general rules of evidence in actions, namely, the thing to be proved, oral evidence, documentary evidence, examination and cross-examination of witnesses, stamping documents at the trial, and amendments at the trial. We next have the evidence in particular actions, ex contractu and ex delicto, proceedings to recover possession of small tenements, and interpleader claims. The Appendix contains the statutes, and rules and orders relating to the subject.

Mr. Davis thus refers to the changes which have been effected in the law during the interval between the first and second editions of his work:—

"The provision enabling the parties to be examined 'as witnesses in the county courts has been extended, 'as the author prognosticated, to the superior courts, 'with, (he ventures to say), on the whole, very beneficial results: while the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, (the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125), has introduced alterations in the practice, on the trial of actions in all courts 'of civil judicature, of so extensive a character as to 'require the attention of every one engaged in the conduct of actions in the county courts, no less than in the 'superior courts. These new provisions accordingly 'have been fully treated of in the present work under 'the different heads of evidence, of handwriting and the 'proof of attested instruments, the examination, cross-examination, and contradiction of witnesses, and the 'stamping of documents at the trial.

"The Bankrupt-law Consolidation Act, and the provisions respecting compositions and arrangements by 'bankrupts and insolvents with their creditors, and the 'law as to bills of sale, among many other recent statutes, materially affect the rights and liabilities of 'sutors.

"Nor is it by reason of legislative enactments alone 'that a revision of the former edition became necessary. 'The Courts of law in the meantime have been occupied in defining the law and reviewing their former 'decisions in many branches. The evidence of part 'payment to take a debt out of the Statute of Limitations, the effect of giving a bill or note on account of 'a claim, and the liability of members of unincorporated companies, may be cited as practical points of 'almost daily occurrence, where reliance cannot now 'be placed on the older cases.

"An addition has been made to the original work by 'the introduction of the practice of the county courts 'from the commencement to the termination of suits. 'In giving a general view of the practice of the courts 'the author has merely yielded to a wish expressed by 'many purchasers of the former edition, and has had 'no desire to enter on a field already occupied by other 'labourers. Bearing in mind that this part of the 'work, at least, must be chiefly used by practitioners 'in the courts, who will consult it with a view to ascertain the nature of the claim or defence they may represent, and the proper tribunal and mode of proceeding in order to establish it, and who are comparatively 'indifferent to the original constitution of the court or 'the nature of the appointment of its officers, the author has arranged the proceedings, as far as possible, 'with reference to the steps to be taken by plaintiffs 'and defendants in the prosecution of their rights. 'Commencing with the jurisdiction of the county courts, and shewing when a plaintiff ought to sue in 'these courts, and when he has the option, without 'risk as to costs, of suing in the superior courts, the 'steps to be taken to sue out a summons are next considered. This is followed by a statement of the powers 'and duty of a defendant on service of the summons. 'The subsequent steps immediately before and at the

"While these pages have been passing through the press, the first report of the County Courts Commissioners has appeared. It is almost needless to say, that should the suggestions of the commissioners be carried into effect at some future period, they will affect the present work in a very trifling degree; for while the only new actions which the commissioners recommend to be placed within the jurisdiction of the county courts are actions for malicious prosecution, the present general jurisdiction of the courts in regard to the amount, cause of action, and situation of the parties, is left untouched."

FIRST REPORT OF THE COUNTY COURTS COMMISSION.

High Bailiff's Fees.

For keeping possession of goods till sale, per day, (including expenses of removal, storage of goods, and all other expenses whatever), not exceeding five days, 6d. in the pound on the value of the goods seized. [This, however, does not apply to cases of interpleader, in which the costs and expenses of possession are to be in each case specially allowed by the judge, but which shall in no case exceed the costs incurred by the bailiff in keeping possession.]

N.B.—In cases within the ordinary jurisdiction of the court, the above-mentioned poundage and fees are to be taken; but where the sum demanded is above 20*l.*, the poundage is to be taken on 20*l.* only.

In all cases of jurisdiction conferred on the court in pursuance of the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, s. 17, the poundage is to be calculated as upon the amount of 20*l.*

All fractions of a pound, for the purpose of calculating the poundage, shall be treated as an entire pound.

Where the plaintiff recovers less than the amount of his claim, so as to reduce the scale of costs, the plaintiff to pay the difference.

The several fees payable on proceedings in replevin to be regulated on the above scale, by the value of the goods distrained, and on proceedings for the recovery of tenements, by the yearly, monthly, or weekly rent of the tenement, according to the letting or value of the tenement sought to be recovered; but in no case to exceed the fees payable on a demand of 20*l.*

In cases of interpleader, the summons shall be issued and the cause heard without the previous payment of any fees; but the costs of the summons and the poundage for the hearing shall be estimated on the value of the goods claimed, and shall be included in the general costs. The value of such goods, in case of dispute, shall be assessed by the judge, who, in his discretion, at the hearing, shall direct whether any and what costs shall be paid, and by and to whom.

Subpoenas to be issued gratis, but must be served by the parties or their agents.

Mode of apportioning Fees.—We propose that the fees, or sums in the name of fees, mentioned in the above table, (with the exception of the fees called "high bailiff's fees"), shall form a fund out of which the clerks and high bailiffs of the courts shall be paid the salaries and allowances hereafter suggested.

Diminution recommended, though Business of Courts not increased.—For the reasons we have already stated, we recommend the suggested diminution in the amount to be raised by fees, even though the business of the county courts should not be increased.

Experience renders Deficit improbable.—Judging, however, from experience, an increase of business, producing an increase of revenue, would probably be the result. Thus, a deficiency of 36,000*l.* on a revenue of 282,000*l.*, or one-seventh, was more than half supplied in 1851, in consequence, we have reason to believe, of the diminution in the amount of the fees, and more just and convenient mode of collecting them.

The Extension Act, 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, and the existing scale, came into operation about the same time. An increase of revenue, to the amount of 36,000*l.*, produced by cases under the extended jurisdiction, was the result. Since then a variety of other acts of Parliament have passed, conferring new jurisdiction on the court, from which, as fees must be paid on the new business introduced into the court, a corresponding increase of revenue may be anticipated. The recommendations contained in our present report, if adopted, would also, to a certain extent, increase the jurisdiction, and, we believe, render the court a more efficient tribunal.

One advantage attending the scale we have last suggested would be the simplification of the accounts of the court. This would lead to some diminution in the expense of stationery, as well as considerable decrease in the labour of the clerks.

Remuneration of Clerks and High Bailiffs.

We now proceed to another important branch of our inquiry, which is as to the proper mode of remunerating the clerks and high bailiffs of the courts.

Remuneration of Clerks and High Bailiffs not sufficient.—At present, although every clerk and high bailiff receives a certain amount of compensation for his services, yet in a very large majority of instances such an amount of remuneration is not received as is calculated to secure the services of efficient officers.

Mode of remunerating Clerks and High Bailiffs.—This leads us to the consideration of a preliminary question, which has been much discussed, as to whether the clerks and high bailiffs should be paid by fees only, by salary only, or partly by salary and partly by fees.

Clerks by Salary, subject to periodical Revision.—We have come to the conclusion that it would be desirable that the clerks should be paid by salaries, and that such salaries should be subject to a periodical revision by the Treasury.

High Bailiffs in same Manner, but also should have Mileage and Fees on Executions and Distresses.—In the case of the high bailiff, however, the duties of his office are of so peculiar a description, and the efficient discharge of them so little under the immediate control of the judge, that we think a strong interest in the complete performance of his duties ought to exist. We think, therefore, that besides his salary, he should be allowed such remuneration in respect of mileage and executions as, with reference to the circumstances of each district, the Lords Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury may from time to time direct.

First, with reference to the clerks.

Principle of determining Amount of Salary.—We propose that the clerk of each court in which the plaints entered do not exceed the number of 200 a year should have a salary of 60*l.* per annum, and that in courts where the plaints exceed 200 the salaries should be increased by sums of 5*l.* for every twenty-five plaints up to 1000 inclusive, and then by sums of 4*l.* for every twenty-five plaints up to 6000 inclusive; but in courts where the complaints exceed that number, the amount of increased salary should be at the discretion of the Lords Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury. Out of the salaries so appointed the clerk should be required to pay the salaries of the clerks he employs to assist him.

Applicable to Clerks now on Salaries.—With reference to those clerks who, as we have already stated, (ante, p. 180), have been placed by the Government on salaries varying from 500*l.* to 800*l.*, we recommend that the principle above stated should only be applied in remunerating their successors.

Secondly, with reference to the high bailiffs.

Principle of determining Amount of Salary.—We propose that their salaries should vary on the same principle as those of the clerks, but should only be one-fourth of the amount to which the clerk is entitled. This we think is a suitable proportion to preserve between the salaries of the two officers, having regard to their respective duties, and taking into consideration that they are to be additionally remunerated for executing warrants, and for mileage on the service of all process.

Expense of Courts consequently increased.—The expenditure of the county courts will, by the adoption of this scheme, be increased by about 30,000*l.* per annum beyond the present revenue.

Scheme recommended, whatever Scale of Fees adopted.—This scheme of salaries we think should be adopted, whether the existing fees, modified as we suggested in the former part of our remarks on the subject of fees, continue to be taken, or the table mentioned in the second part be introduced into the county courts.

The following table shews the effect of this scheme, by reference to the business done in the courts during the year 1853:—

[Here follows an elaborate table upon the subject.]

Costs of Professional Assistance.

Before we proceed to state our opinions on the subject of costs, it may be proper here to refer to the provisions of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 54, s. 1.

No Scale made under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 54, s. 1.—Previously to the passing of that statute much discussion had taken place in both Houses of Parliament on the subject of costs to be allowed to legal practitioners in the county courts. It was ultimately provided by that statute, that the Chancellor should be empowered to appoint five county court judges to prepare scales of costs, both between party and party, and between attorney and client. Those scales were to be submitted to three judges of the superior courts, of which a chief was to be one, and, when sanctioned by them, they were to regulate the costs to be taken in the county courts. Five county court judges were accordingly appointed, and they, after several communications and conferences on the subject with several of the law societies and individual legal practitioners, prepared scales of costs in conformity with what appeared to them to be the intentions of the Legislature. When submitted to the learned judges to whom these scales were referred, their Lordships doubted whether the language of the statute was sufficiently explicit to enable them to dispose of the subject in a satisfactory manner. No amending act was passed, and nothing further was done by the learned judges with reference to the scales. The law, therefore, on this subject remains as above stated, (ante, p. 282).

Costs between Party and Party, and Attorney and Client.—It appears, from the statement on this subject at the page referred to, that in the county courts, according to the present law, no costs are recoverable as costs in the cause between party and party, except those which are specifically appointed in the statutes upon the subject; and that, as between attorney and client, no provision, with one exception, is made with respect to costs.

We propose to consider the question, first, with reference to costs between party and party; and, secondly, with reference to costs as between attorney and client.

I.—With reference to Costs between Party and Party.—That question may be treated, first, with respect to suits for sums not exceeding 20*l.*; secondly, for sums exceeding 20*l.*, and not exceeding 50*l.*; thirdly, claims under the consent clause, 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, s. 17.

1. *With respect to Suits for Sums not exceeding 20*l.—One of the objects which the Legislature had in view in establishing the county courts was to secure for the poorer suitors a cheap tribunal, in which they might state their own case before the judge, and obtain from him a prompt decision without the intervention of legal advisers. As a rule, in cases where the amount claimed is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the court, no professional assistance is required. The exceptions to this rule are few. To introduce the practice of allowing professional costs in all cases would be to alter a general rule for the sake of an exception. This appears to us impolitic. For a certain class of exceptional cases the Legislature has already provided in the section cited, by awarding a certain limited amount of costs to counsel and attorney, at the discretion of the judge.

Present Scale to remain.—We think that it would be inexpedient to increase the number of exceptions or allow a greater amount of professional costs than the Legislature already permits, or free the suitors from the exercise of the judge's discretion as to granting costs in those exceptional cases. It may be that the fees awarded by the statute are too small adequately to compensate legal practitioners in cases of real difficulty; but experience shews that the number of the cases belonging to this class, decided in the county courts, is extremely small, and we do not think it wise to endanger an important principle of the tribunal for the sake of a few exceptional cases.

2. *Where the Claim exceeds 20*l.*, but does not exceed 50*l.—In these cases the county court ceases to be exclusively a "small debts court." It is then a court of jurisdiction concurrent with the superior courts.

The proceedings in the county court, being simple, local, and rapid, of course cannot require the establishment of a scale of costs to the same amount as that existing in the superior courts; but such a scale should be allowed as would, where professional assistance is requisite, reasonably compensate the legal practitioner.

We, therefore, think that an amount of costs higher than that which is now sanctioned by law, but limited to such an amount as would secure a reasonable compensation to the practitioner for his services in the county court, should be allowed, at the discretion of the judge.

3. With respect to Claims within the Consent Jurisdiction, under the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, s. 17.—In these claims we think the same principle as in cases within the concurrent jurisdiction ought to be applied.

II.—With regard to Costs as between Attorney and Client.—We will consider this branch of the subject under the same divisions as that of which we have already disposed.

1. *As to Cases where the Claim does not exceed 20*l.—According to the construction which has been put upon sect. 91 of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, it appears that an attorney, who has conducted a proceeding in a county court, may recover from his client his costs for professional exertions out of court on the same scale as in the superior court, the fees mentioned in the above section being intended as a compensation for the mere act of appearing in court.

No greater Costs than by Law allowed, unless Client sign an Undertaking to pay greater Amount.—We are of opinion, that where the claim does not exceed 20*l.*, it would be desirable, in conformity with the principle of treating these courts in such cases as the fitting tribunal for the recovery of small demands, without professional assistance, that no greater sum should be recoverable by the attorney from his client than the fees mentioned in the section, unless the client signs a memorandum, to be attested by a witness other than the attorney, undertaking to pay costs on some scale, or for some amount, different from that provided by the statute.

2. *With respect to Costs of this Description where the Claim exceeds 20*l.*, but does not exceed 50*l.—There we think, on the principle already referred to, that an amount of costs, such as would reasonably compensate the practitioner, should be allowed.

3. With respect to Claims within the Consent Clause.—In those claims we make the like recommendations as in the last class of cases.

METROPOLITAN DISTRICTS.

Inconvenient to treat them as mutually foreign.—We have already stated, that in order to establish the system of local administration of justice, the country has been divided into several districts, to each of which a county court is attached. Among these districts are several which may be considered as strictly metropolitan. Although they together embrace the metropolis, exclusive of the city of London, they are treated for all purposes as foreign to each other, as much as if they were placed at opposite ends of the kingdom. This in many cases is productive of great inconvenience. The boundary line of a district is frequently and necessarily traced along the centre of a street, and each side of the street is therefore in a district foreign to the other. The exposition of the practice of the county courts which we have already given, with reference to applications to sue out of the district, the transmission and return of process, and the enforcement of warrants against the goods or body of the judgment debtor, will sufficiently shew the justice of the complaints which suitors make of the present system of the above districts.

System unjust to Creditors and burdensome to Debtors.—One consequence of this system is peculiarly productive of injustice to creditors. By the present law the plaintiff must, as a general rule, sue the debtor in the district of the latter. He is, therefore, frequently obliged, at great inconvenience, to go to a court at a considerable distance from his own place of business, for the purpose of taking out process, and afterwards proving his case. This state of the law is contrary to the general principle, that the debtor should find the creditor in order to pay him. Although the application of this principle has been in certain cases modified, in order to promote the local administration of justice, yet where the debtor and creditor both reside in the same metropolis the present law appears to have rather an opposite tendency. To the debtor also the system is productive of an increased burthen, in consequence of the proceeding for the recovery of claims being thus rendered unnecessarily complicated.

Plaintiff should have Option to sue in his own District.—To obviate the inconvenience consequent on such a state of the law, we propose that where a plaintiff dwells, or carries on business, or has employment in any of the districts of the Bloomsbury, Bow, Brompton, Clerkenwell, Lambeth, Marylebone, Shoreditch, Southwark, Westminster, or Whitechapel county courts, he should have the option of suing the defendant in such district as the law at present permits, or in any of the districts wherein he so dwells, carries on business, or has employment, provided that the defendant dwells, carries on business, or has employment in some one of the said districts; and that for proceedings in the cause all the metropolitan districts should be treated as the district of the court out of which the process issued.

The Metropolitan Districts treated as Parts of one District.—By these means a reasonable power to compel a debtor to attend at a court most convenient to his creditor would be secured, a considerable expense would be saved to the suitors, and the inconveniences resulting from each metropolitan district being treated as foreign to the other would be obviated.

LONDON SMALL DEBTS COURT.

Court should be assimilated to County Courts.—We have already stated that the city of London is excepted from the operation of the statute establishing the county courts. A court similar in its constitution to that of the county court has by a local act been established for the recovery of small debts within the limits of the city of London. The judge and officers are appointed by the corporation. This court is surrounded by the districts of various county courts, and is occasionally in communication with almost every county court in England and Wales. It forms, however, no part of the county court system, but is independent of it, and is regulated by its own rules of procedure. Great practical inconveniences to the suitors and officers both of that court and of the county courts are the result.

We therefore recommend that the Small Debts Court for the city of London should be assimilated to the county courts.

LOCAL COURTS OF RECORD.

Among other subjects of inquiry, our attention has been directed to that of the numerous courts of record established in different places throughout the country.

Proceedings in those Courts.—It appears from the parliamentary returns of the 19th May, 1836, and others, that the jurisdiction of those courts extends to claims of different amounts, and that the mode of procedure is in a very large majority of them similar to that which formerly existed in the superior courts antecedent to the passing of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1852. In those instances the same forms of pleading and the same minute technicalities are preserved as existed previous to the passing of that act. In some few courts the mode of proceeding provided by the act referred to has been introduced by Order in Council. The proceedings, therefore, of those courts are generally more expensive and more dilatory than in the superior courts, and, when brought into operation for the recovery of small sums, are extremely burdensome to the suitor. These courts have a jurisdiction concurrent with that of the county court. The effect of this state of the law is, that where a defendant is resident within the local jurisdiction, the plaintiff may sue him either in the county court or in the local court of record. In the former court the proceedings are simple and inexpensive—in the latter complicated and costly. If the plaintiff exercises his option by suing in the latter court, the defendant is compelled to pay a heavy and disproportionate amount of costs. The ancient mode of proceeding is preserved in these courts, not for the benefit of the public, but for the profit of those who practise there, and who gain by the increased amount of costs incurred. It certainly is desirable that such an anomalous state of the law should not continue.

We think that the encouragement now held out to the practitioners in those courts, by the amount of costs created by proceedings there, should be discontinued.

Principle of placing these Courts under Restrictions already recognised by Law.—By law, if an action be brought in the superior court for a claim which is recoverable in the county court, and for a less sum than 5*l.* or 20*l.*, according as the claim is founded on tort or contract, the plaintiff, as a general rule, is not entitled to costs, unless a judge of the superior court certifies that it was a proper case to be tried in the superior court. Now, it is not reasonable that these local courts of record should be placed on a higher footing than the superior courts. The principle of not permitting the local courts of record to entertain suits for the recovery of small sums, and create costs, where, under similar circumstances, the plaintiff would not be allowed to recover costs in the superior courts, was recognised more than thirty-five years ago by the Legislature, when the 58 Geo. 3, c. 30, was passed. By that act it was provided, that in actions of trespass for assault and battery, to be commenced in any court having jurisdiction to hold pleas in actions or suits to the amount of 40s., other than the superior courts at Westminster, if the jury assessed the damages under 40s. the plaintiff should recover only the same amount of costs as damages. This provision became necessary, as the different statutes previously passed on the subject of costs, except the statute of James I, did not apply to inferior courts of record. The mischiefs, therefore, of onerous and vexatious litigation, which had to a certain extent been restrained by the statutes relating to the superior courts, continue in their most objectionable form in the inferior courts of record. It is not improbable that if the state of the law on this subject had been drawn to the attention of the Legislature when the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, was in progress through Parliament, some provision would have been introduced to extend the operation of that act to the inferior courts of record.

Courts to be assimilated to Superior Courts with relation to Costs.—We therefore recommend that the same law should be adopted with reference both to the superior courts at Westminster and to the inferior courts of record. If, therefore, in any of those courts a less sum than 5*l.* in tort, or 20*l.* in contract, be recovered, the plaintiff should be entitled to no costs, unless the judge of the court shall certify that it was a proper case to be tried there.

We humbly submit this our first report to your Majesty's royal consideration.

OBSERVATIONS BY MR. J. PITT TAYLOR.

On the following points I have the misfortune to differ from the majority of the commissioners:—

Jurisdiction by Consent.—In the principal Report the following passage occurs, (ante, p. 264):—

"We think, however, that the provisions of the statute" (13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, s. 17) "as to the mode in which the consent of parties is required to be given should continue."

From this recommendation I dissent. Under the statute, the consent necessary to confer jurisdiction on the county courts in matters beyond their ordinary jurisdiction must be drawn up in the shape of a memorandum, to be signed by both parties, or by their attorneys, prior to the commencement of the action.

I regard this mode of conferring jurisdiction on the county courts as illusory. It has been tried now for nearly five years, and has proved an utter failure.

The reason is obvious. A man who is about to submit his dispute with another party to a court of justice is not often in a frame of mind which is calculated to lead him, on the one hand, to offer to his adversary any amicable proposal for settling their mutual differences in any particular mode, or, on the other, to entertain any such proposal should it emanate from his adversary.

The legal advisers are little likely to agree in recommending any course of proceeding which, in relieving their respective clients from the heavy costs of the superior courts, would proportionately be injurious to their own personal interests. To require the active consent of both parties under these circumstances is, in my judgment, an object that cannot be attained; and all that can reasonably be expected or required is, that the county court should not have jurisdiction unless the parties passively consent.

I submit, therefore, that the present mode of conferring jurisdiction on the county courts by consent ought to be abrogated; and that, in lieu thereof, those courts ought to be empowered to determine all legal disputes, of whatever nature or amount, excepting actions for criminal conversation, provided that neither of the litigating parties raises any objection to such jurisdiction.

The plaintiff, of course, will not have recourse to the county court unless he prefers that tribunal to the courts of Westminster Hall; and in order to afford ample opportunity to the defendant of objecting to the jurisdiction, I propose that the summons, in every case which is beyond the ordinary jurisdiction of the court, should be personally served, and should, moreover, contain a distinct notice that the defendant has a right to object to the jurisdiction of the county court, and to have the cause tried in such one of the superior courts as he thinks fit to specify, on giving a written notice to that effect to the clerk of the county court within a certain number of days after service.

The clerk, on the receipt of such a notice, should be required forthwith to transmit the proceedings to the superior court specified, and the entry of the plaint in the county court should be regarded for all purposes as the commencement of the action. The clerk should also send notice to the plaintiff of the defendant's objection.

To this plan I have heard only two objections raised*. The first is, that the defendant might not read the summons, and consequently might not be aware of his power to remove the proceedings.

I confess that I am not much struck with the weight of this objection. If there be anything in it, the practice of judgment by default, which prevails in the superior courts, must be of the essence of injustice. In the one case, the carelessness of the defendant may subject him to the evil of having judgment pronounced against him in a county court after trial; in the other, it will render him liable to a like result in the superior court without any trial at all. This argument, at least, can scarcely be urged by gentlemen who, "with regard to sums above 20*l.* where the claim is founded on contract," entertain an opinion "that the practice of judgment by default may be beneficially introduced" into the county courts. (See Report, ante, p. 285).

* The objections and arguments which I have attempted to combat are such as have come to my knowledge, whether urged by individual commissioners or by persons unconnected with the commission. Other reasons for rejecting my proposals may of course exist, but I have not heard them advanced.

"A mass of matter, cases, arguments, and discussions, thrown together in a work of such bulk, is like a library containing as many different works as this contains cases . . . presenting the authorities on each point in the lappasima verba of judicial decisions, but connecting, modifying, approving, or condemning them in his own words, which will be deservedly considered of little less weight by the student than the dicta to which they relate. . . . Such is the variety of topics, subdivided into an almost infinite ramification of cases and points, into which the learned author is necessarily led. Few writers, we apprehend, could be found sufficiently persevering to pursue every topic in such a list with the same untiring vigour, till each in its turn was exhausted; few would have the learning, fewer still the resolution."—Law Magazine, No. 22.

"We must far surpass the limits of an article were we to attempt to discuss, with any sort of completeness, the vast variety of subjects which Mr. Spence's second volume contains—subjects treated by him with a fulness of detail indispensable in a book designed, not only as a guide, pointing out to the student the great principles upon which the law in its complexities of actual business depends, and tracing the mutual connexion of those extensive provinces of equity with whose details he is expected to become familiar, but also as a storehouse, from whose well-arranged repositories the practising lawyer may readily furnish himself with the armour needed for the conflicts of the Bar."—Law Review, No. 22.

"There remains a vast amount of valuable information, both theoretical and practical, upon topics not to be found in any of the recent treatises, which must be carried to the sole credit of Mr. Spence's own original and laborious investigations; and from this results the peculiar character of the book, that it is at once terse and recherché, containing all the stock information on subjects within its scope which may be found in the current text-books, and, superadded to these, the result of an experienced lawyer's researches in neglected paths, and resumé of, or criticisms (where criticism is called for) on, the most recent decisions, doctrines, and innovations of the Court of Chancery. . . . A more dense mass of living law, available alike for study, reference, and practice, has seldom been presented to the Profession."—Jurist, No. 668.

"The reader, however, will be surprised at the mass of information which it contains; all the principal branches of learning are explored. . . . There never was less book-making in any book than in this."—Law Magazine, N. S., No. 8.

"A work which promises to be one of the most learned and philosophical treatises on the largest branch of British jurisprudence which our language has produced."—Law Times.

The attention of the Profession is invited to the advantages offered by this Office to Solicitors and their Clients, which will be found to be greater than in most other Life Offices.

ADVANTAGES TO THE ASSURED.

1. Four-fifths of the Profits are divided triennially amongst the Assured.

In some Offices the Assured may not be entitled to a Bonus until the expiration of ten years from the time of effecting the Policy, whilst in this Office three years is the utmost limit.

2. At the first division of Profits in May, 1853, a Reversionary Bonus, averaging 454. per cent., was declared on all Participating Policies. In some cases the Bonus exceeded 614. per cent. on the premiums paid.

On reference to the Prospectuses of some of the principal Offices, it will be found that the Bonus on their first division was much less, viz. 291. per cent.

3. The next division of Profits will be declared in May, 1856, when all Policies effected in 1855 will participate.

In most Offices Assurers do not participate in the Profits until after payment of from three to five annual premiums, but in this Office they may participate on payment of a single premium.

ADVANTAGES TO THE PROFESSION.

A Commission of 104. per cent. is allowed on the first year's premium, and 54. per cent. annually afterwards; and, as an additional advantage to persons introducing business, the Shareholders have by the Deed of Settlement given up half of their Profits for the benefit of such persons as extra Commission.

THE JURIST.

By the stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 3, it is enacted, that a lease of any tenements or hereditaments required by law to be in writing shall be void at law unless made by deed. The Courts have had to consider the effect of these words on several occasions, but it was only in a very recent case that the most important question involved in them was judicially decided. It had been plausibly argued, that as the statute renders void such a lease unless it be under seal, therefore the Courts would construe the instrument as amounting merely to an agreement for a lease—ut res magis valeat, quam pereat—and as carrying out the intention of the parties, who meant that their contract should have some operation. The Court of Common Pleas, however, have negatived this view, and decided, that if the language would have been held to constitute a present demise before the statute, it shall be so construed now, and therefore shall be held void if it want the solemnity of the seal. (Stratton v. Pettit, 1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 662).

In that case "articles of agreement" were executed, whereby the plaintiff agreed to let, and the defendant to take, certain premises, to hold to the defendant for the term of five years, the fee-simple to be purchased by the defendant at the end of the five years, the defendant rendering to the plaintiff, as well for the rent as the purchase, 70*l.*, by seventy shares of 1*l.* each in an assurance company. No abstract or investigation of title was to be required beyond evidence of seisin and possession as owner by the plaintiff and his ancestors for twenty-one years last past. The ground of the judgment is contained in the following words of Jervis, C. J.:—"The rule to be collected from all the cases is, that the intention of the parties, as declared by the words of the instrument, must govern the construction; and the Court will, if possible, put such a construction upon it as will effectuate the intention of the parties, rather than defeat it. The question, then, is, what was the intention of the parties when the instrument was made? Doubtless they intended to make an instrument which should have some operation; but did they intend to make a lease or an agreement? If the former, they have not done what they intended, because the lease is void by the statute. The intention of the parties must be collected from the instrument itself; and the rule is well explained by Lawrence, J., in the case of Morgan v. Bissell, (3 Taunt. 65)—'When there is an instrument by which it appears that one party is to give possession and the other to take it, that is a lease, unless it can be collected from the instrument itself that it is an agreement only for a lease to be afterwards made.' . . . It is admitted that before the statute this instrument would have been held to be a lease; and if the true rule be, that the intention of the parties, as declared by the words of the instrument, must govern the construction, it is clear that the parties intended this instrument to operate as a lease."

It had been previously held, that if a tenant enter and occupy the premises and pay rent under such an instrument, he becomes tenant from year to year upon the terms contained in the instrument, and is bound to quit at the expiration of the period therein mentioned, without any notice to quit. (Tress v. Savage, 18 Jur., part 1, p. 680; Lee v. Smith, 23 L. J., Ex., 198). So under the repealed statute, the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 76. (Arden v. Sullivan, 19 L. J., Q. B., 268; Doe v. Moffatt, 15 Q. B. 257). Analogous cases had been decided under the Statute of Frauds. Thus, although by that statute leases by parol for more than three years have the effect of estates at will merely, occupation and payment of rent under such leases create tenancies from year to year, (Clayton v. Blakey, 8 T. R. 3), and the instrument regulates the terms of the holding. (Richardson v. Gifford, 1 Ad. & El. 52; Beale v. Sanders, 5 Scott, 58; Doe v. Bell, 5 T. R. 471; De Medina v. Polson, 1 Holt, 47).

We may here refer to a late case, in which it was held that the 3rd section of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, declaring that a lease required by law to be in writing, of any "tenements or hereditaments," shall be void unless by deed, does not apply to agreements for letting, or to leases of tolls under the 3 Geo. 4, c. 126. (Shepherd v. Hodsman, 21 L. J., Q. B., 263).

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

It will hardly be credited that in a bill supported by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and intitled "Stage Carriage Duties, &c. Bill," was a clause (clause 6) providing that exemptions from stamp duty on behalf of building societies should not extend to conveyances, &c. for sums exceeding 240*l.* The clause was abandoned, not on account of its incongruity with the scope, object, and title of the bill, although that was pointed out by Mr. Bright and others, but because the principle involved in the clause was objected to. When shall we have bills drawn with something like a logical conformity between the title and the contents? Would it not be as well to look to this simple matter in these days of purification and codification of the statute law?

The committee appointed to inquire into Baron Rothschild's case (after hearing counsel on his behalf) have reported, that in their opinion, by undertaking the loan required by Government, he did not enter into a contract within the meaning of stat. 22 Geo. 3, c. 45, so as to be disqualified from sitting in Parliament.

The Assizes and Sessions Bill has been withdrawn for the present.

GOVERNMENT MEASURES OF LAW REFORM.

Lord Lyndhurst begged to take this opportunity of asking his noble and learned friend upon the woolsack for some explanation upon the subject of law reform. His noble and learned friend had introduced a bill for altering the law of divorce, and also for the purpose of transferring the jurisdiction from the Ecclesiastical Court to the Court of Chancery. After that bill had proceeded a certain length, part of the bill was withdrawn by the voluntary act of his noble and learned friend, and the other part in consequence of some opposition to the bill on the part of a right reverend prelate. He stated as his reason, that the Testamentary Bill had been thrown out in the other House; and his noble and learned friend, in answer to the Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench, said that the Government would use their utmost endeavour to pass a bill on that subject. It was a singular circumstance that that bill went down last year from that House on the 7th April, but not a single attempt was made by the law officers of the Crown to proceed with it. He had also stated that the Government would be prepared to introduce in the present session a large measure of reform, embracing the whole of the ecclesiastical courts. He did not find that either in that or the other House of Parliament any attempt had been made to redeem that pledge. His noble and learned friend had not even introduced a bill of divorce, or any bill relating to matrimonial cases. The Testamentary Jurisdiction Bill had gone down at an early period of the previous session to the House of Commons. It was, therefore, perfected; but notwithstanding this circumstance, and that Parliament met in December, the law officers of the Crown did not think proper to bring it forward until the end of May, and this bill had consequently again fallen through and been withdrawn. These circumstances required some explanation. His noble and learned friend might mention the war as the cause of the abandonment of this bill, but he did not see that either his noble and learned friend or the law officers of the Crown in the other House of Parliament had troubled themselves much about the complications of the Eastern question. From circumstances that had come to his knowledge, he believed that this mode of proceeding might be explained by some want of understanding or co-operation between the Lord Chancellor and the law officers of the Crown. His noble and learned friend had introduced a bill for the registry of deeds, and for the purpose of shortening conveyances and simplifying titles. That bill was fully considered and discussed, was referred to a select committee, and went down to the other House of Parliament with the approbation and sanction of his noble and learned friend and of that House. But what happened in the other House? The bill was immediately opposed by the law officers of the Crown. The Solicitor-General said, that what was wanted was a bill, not for the registry of deeds, but of titles. The consequence was, that the bill was referred to a select committee, and nothing more was heard of it from that time to this. But that was not the only fact that shewed the want of cordial co-operation between the Lord Chancellor and the law officers of the Crown in the other House. His noble and learned friend had issued a commission for the consolidation of the statute law. His noble and learned friend was the president of that commission; he sanctioned all its proceedings, and the law officers of the Crown also attended its meetings. The report of that commission was laid on the table. On looking at that report he found it signed by all the commissioners except the law officers of the Crown. He therefore took it for granted that they differed from the Lord Chancellor upon that report. He relied upon this for substantiating what he stated—that there was a want of co-operation and good understanding with respect to law reform between the Lord Chancellor and the law officers of the Crown. This had led to the greatest possible inconvenience, and it shewed that without a good understanding between the legal authorities of the Government it was in vain to expect an amendment of the law. The result was, that up to the present time, when they were going to adjourn for the holidays, not one single Government bill for reforming the laws of England had been passed. This was a most unsatisfactory state of things, and required explanation; and he had made these observations to enable his noble and learned friend to make such explanations as he might think proper to offer to their Lordships.

The Lord Chancellor said that the first complaint of his noble and learned friend referred to the Testamentary Bill, and he truly stated that last session he (the Lord Chancellor) had introduced that bill. It was much considered by a select committee, and that bill went down to the Commons, where certainly it did not receive approbation, and did not become law. The course that he thought it best to take in the present session was, that the bill should originate in the House of Commons, and, a great many objections in detail having been made to the bill of last year, he consulted with the Solicitor-General, who was to take charge of it, and adopted some amendments likely to smooth the passage of the bill in the other House of Parliament. He was not prepared to state the day on which that bill was introduced, but he was certain his noble and learned friend was mistaken in supposing that it was not brought in until the latter part of May. He believed it was brought in in March, but to this he could not pledge himself. At all events, it was prepared quite early enough, and it was introduced as soon as the state of public business made it possible to proceed with it; and although he should not fall back upon the war as a justification for doing nothing, he thought that the state of business arising out of the discussions about the war, which had taken up four-fifths of the session, would explain why so dull a subject had been so little able to obtain a hearing. His noble and learned friend ought to be the last person to express great surprise, and to complain that this bill had not received the sanction of the Legislature, because the same thing had happened to him also when he was Lord Chancellor. In 1843 a similar measure was introduced into the House of Commons, and failed; in 1844 it was introduced into this House, but did not pass; and it was again introduced in the following session. He hoped that the same course would be again adopted, and that the measure would be introduced next session, and then the matter would be placed in the same position that it occupied during the chancellorship of his noble and learned friend. It was said that he had promised a comprehensive plan of testamentary reform. Now, the fact was this—he had been taunted with doing only half his duty in introducing a measure for the reform of testamentary jurisdiction; he had been told that he ought to deal with the whole subject, viz. testamentary jurisdiction, matrimonial jurisdiction, and church discipline jurisdiction, and he accordingly undertook to get measures prepared which would embrace all these matters. The Matrimonial Bill had been prepared, but the subject was so connected with the Testamentary Bill that it was impossible for him to introduce it until he could see how the Testamentary Court was to be constituted. A bill had been framed with great care upon the subject of church discipline, and had been submitted to the bishops; but there were great differences of opinion with respect to it, and the subject was attended with many difficulties, and the measure had not therefore been presented to the House. He had been assured by the Solicitor-General that the Testamentary Bill was read a second time with every prospect of success, but the attention of the other House had been so absorbed by subjects of overwhelming interest that it was found impracticable to pass it. With regard to the suggestion that there was not a cordial co-operation between the law officers of the Crown and himself, and the example adduced by his noble and learned friend of the Registration Bill, which the Solicitor-General did not support in the other House, he must say that his noble and learned friend was labouring under a mistake. The Solicitor-General thought the bill did not go far enough, and it was referred to a select committee, of which Mr. Walpole and other gentlemen besides the law officers were members, which recommended the appointment of a royal commission to inquire into the whole subject. He felt bound to issue such a commission; and the Solicitor-General had assured him that the labours of the commission were so far advanced, that in the course of the ensuing recess they would not only produce a report recommending a better system of registration, but would also frame a measure which would be introduced next session. His noble and learned friend further complained of the sluggishness of the Government in not having introduced any measures of law reform during the present session. He denied that accusation. A chancellor or a minister was not doing good by simply introducing measure after measure, which he called measures of reform; but if he found that anything was going wrong, it was his duty to provide a remedy. The statement that no measure of reform had become law during this session was certainly near the truth. [Lord Lyndhurst.—It is the exact truth.] But early in the session he had introduced a measure giving extended summary jurisdiction in cases of petty offences. That bill had passed this House, and had been referred to a select committee of the House of Commons; and his right hon. friend the Home Secretary had assured him on Saturday last that he had not the least doubt of its becoming law. It must, however, be remembered, that at the present moment the House of Commons were more anxious to forward the bills which they had originated than to proceed with those which had been sent down from this House. Another measure which would be of essential benefit to the mass of the community, although it might not excite a great deal of popular approbation, had been sent down to the other House. It was the bill for getting rid of the necessity for private acts of Parliament in dealing with settled estates, and the Solicitor-General, who had taken charge of it, had assured him that he did not doubt that it would eventually be passed. It had been referred to a select committee, because there was a notion in the other House that it would have the effect of permitting the inclosure of Hampstead-heath. It had not the slightest reference to that subject; but the insertion of a clause had been proposed which would obviate all difficulty of the kind. They had been told that the Charity Commission had done nothing since its appointment. He protested against the truth of that assertion, for the commissioners had done a great deal of good in an unobtrusive manner, and he was satisfied that they would do more good if their powers were further extended. He had consequently introduced a measure extending their powers. It had been sent down to the other House, and he should be much disappointed if it did not become law this session. He had also introduced a bill for reforming the University of Cambridge. He, therefore, felt not guilty of the charge made by his noble and learned friend, having introduced many important measures which promised to become law before the end of the session; and he thought his noble and learned friend would have done better to wait until the session drew nearer to a close before making his complaint. He much regretted that the Attorney and Solicitor-General had not thought fit to sign the report of the Statute-law Commission, but he had no authority to call upon them to sign it if they did not think proper to do so. He should be glad to be the means of introducing next session measures which had failed in the present; but he thought that his noble and learned friend attributing blame to him because the House of Commons did not pass the Testamentary Jurisdiction Bill was really attributing blame to him to which he was not obnoxious. In the course of the present session he had received two reports, which he had anxiously considered. One of these reports had reference to the county courts, and would necessarily give rise to legislation, and, indeed, a bill had been partly prepared, but he could not with any propriety have introduced it during the present session, for it was impossible that it could have passed into law. The other report was as to the state of the Incumbered Estates Court, Ireland. He was in hopes that he might have introduced a bill on this subject this session, but the changes recommended by the report were so important, and on the whole so useful, that they would require considerable consideration. He might have obtained some credit for introducing this bill, but he felt that it would have been obtaining credit under false pretences, for the bill could not have passed this session. He had also, at the suggestion of his noble and learned friend Lord Brougham, introduced a bill, which had passed their Lordships' House, for additional sessions and assizes; the bill, however, was objected to by the other House, and required more consideration than could be given to it this session. He had been in communication with the Secretary of State for the Home Department, and was informed that though this bill would not pass into law this session, yet the royal prerogative would be brought to bear on the subject, and additional commissions would be issued for several counties.

Lord Lyndhurst said that his noble and learned friend had replied to him by a tu quoque; but this did not apply to his case, for when he held the office now held by his noble and learned friend he did his utmost to pass the Testamentary Jurisdiction Bill. His complaint was, not that they had failed in passing bills, but that they had let the last two sessions pass without making any attempt to pass any bills. His statement was, that not a single bill for the improvement of the law which had been proposed by her Majesty's Government had received the royal assent. His noble and learned friend had met this statement, not by contradicting it, for that was impossible, but by stating that a considerable number of bills had passed their Lordships, and had been sent to the other House; and though they had not passed a single bill during the six months, yet his noble and learned friend flattered himself that during the four or five remaining weeks of the session they would pass these bills. His noble and learned friend was much more sanguine on this point than he was; for he took what had been done as a good picture of what was likely to take place, and had no hope that the bills would be passed this session.

Lord Brougham trusted that his noble and learned friend (Lord Lyndhurst) would early next session apply himself to one of the subjects to which he had directed his observations, viz. to that of the ecclesiastical courts jurisdiction, particularly with regard to the matter of divorce, for the state of the law with regard to this subject was in a most shameful and disgraceful state. His noble and learned friend, among the many great and invaluable services which he had rendered to his country, could not render it a greater service than by taking up, with all the weight which was justly due to his authority in that House, the country, and the Profession, the subject which had been referred to.

Lord Lyndhurst said that he could not understand why there should be a difference between the law of divorce in the northern and southern parts of the island. He believed that in Scotland the law of divorce worked exceedingly well, and he saw no reason why it should not be extended to England.

Lord Brougham was convinced that if his noble and learned friend would peruse the evidence and the report of the committee over which he (Lord Brougham) presided a few years ago, he would find abundant reasons for holding more firmly the opinion which he had now expressed.

The subject then dropped.

THE LIMITED LIABILITY ACT.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—By the 12th section of the Limited Liability Bill now before Parliament it is provided that every pecuniary penalty under the act shall be deemed a debt due to the Crown, and shall be recoverable accordingly.

Will not the effect of this section be seriously to impede any dealings with the real estate of any person who may be a director of any of the numerous companies which are expected to take advantage of the act when passed? On reference to the other sections, it will be seen that any director may become liable to a very considerable amount of penalties, which, it is presumed, will charge his lands as against a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice. W.

FIRST REPORT OF THE COUNTY COURTS COMMISSION.

The second objection urged against the plan is, that it would operate prejudicially to the interests of the legal profession. I do not think that it would have that effect to any great extent, as the causes which would find their way into the county courts, were the plan adopted, would probably for the most part be of a simple nature. But assuming that the result suggested would follow, it seems to me to afford no valid answer to the proposed change. The real interests of no body of men can be advanced or protected by laws which are oppressive on other classes; and it does seem to me to savour of oppression when parties are forced, unless they consent to an amicable arrangement, which is too much to expect from them, to incur heavy costs in litigation in Westminster Hall, though the plaintiff is willing, and the defendant is not unwilling, to have the dispute settled at a far cheaper rate by an inferior tribunal.

Distinction between Contracts and Torts with respect to Costs in the Superior Courts.—The Report contains the following passage, (ante, p. 264):—

"The present law as to costs in the superior courts, so far as it affects jurisdiction, should, we think, remain unaltered," with an exception not material to my purpose.

I dissent from this proposition. At present a wide distinction exists between actions founded on contract and actions founded on tort. If any sum not exceeding 20*l.* be recovered in the former class of actions in a superior court, the plaintiff is deprived of costs, unless the judge certifies that the cause was fit to be tried before him. The same law prevails in actions on tort only when a sum not exceeding 5*l.* is recovered. This distinction should, in my opinion, be abolished; and no plaintiff should be allowed to recover costs in a superior court, whether the action be founded on contract or tort, unless he recovers a sum exceeding 20*l.*, or unless the judge certifies in his favour.

The main object of the Legislature in establishing the county courts was to protect litigants from the ruinous expenses of the superior courts in all cases where the matter in dispute was, comparatively speaking, of small amount. To effect this object it was necessary not only to create tribunals in which justice might be administered at a trifling cost, but to hold out a strong inducement to plaintiffs to have recourse to them when created. Hence the provisions respecting the deprivation of costs were introduced into the original County Court Act, the effect of these provisions being, not strictly to confer exclusive jurisdiction on the county courts, and to make it absolutely compulsory on plaintiffs to sue in them, but simply to induce plaintiffs to do so in the great majority of instances, by exposing them to the risk of being deprived of costs should they needlessly invoke the aid of the more costly tribunals.

The wisdom of dealing with the subject in this mode is not questioned; and the commissioners are all agreed that the county courts should possess a quasi exclusive jurisdiction over "small claims and small disputes," and "that they shall be made complete courts for that purpose."

The views taken by Mr. Finlason of the practical bearing and operation of these acts are remarkably shrewd and suggestive. ADVANTAGES TO THE ASSURED.

- Four-fifths of the Profits are divided triennially amongst the Assured.
- In some Offices the Assured may not be entitled to a Bonus until the expiration of ten years from the time of effecting the Policy, whilst in this Office three years is the utmost limit.

- On reference to the Prospectuses of some of the principal Offices, it will be found that the Bonus on their first division was much less, viz. 291. per cent.
- The next division of Profits will be declared in May, 1856, when all Policies effected in 1855 will participate.
- In most Offices Assurers do not participate in the Profits until after payment of from three to five annual premiums, but in this Office they may participate on payment of a single premium.

ADVANTAGES TO THE PROFESSION.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, AUGUST 4, 1855.

THE clauses of the stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, which give to judgment creditors the same rights against the debtor's property as if he had himself charged it with the debt have been prolific of perplexing questions. In the case of Whitworth v. Gaugain, (Cr. & Ph. 325), Lord Cottenham was misled by the word "charge" into an erroneous interpretation of the act, which was corrected by Sir J. Wigram, V. C., and afterwards abandoned by the Chancellor himself, with the unanimous assent of the Profession. (3 Hare, 416; 1 Ph. 728). In Hawkins v. Gathercole, (1 Sim., N. S., 74), Lord Cranworth, while Vice-Chancellor, decided, upon words which were certainly literally capable of no other construction, that the act extended to charge benefices; and the reversal of his decision by the Lords Justices (1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 481) has not met with such universal acquiescence. The case of Watts v. Porter (decided by the Court of Queen's Bench in Trin. Term, 1854; 3 El. & Bl. 743; 1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 133) may, perhaps, be classed with those we have mentioned, as one in which the fatal word "charge" has betrayed more judges. That case arose upon the 14th section of the act, which is rather differently worded from the 13th. It enacts, that if a judgment debtor has any Government stock, funds, or annuities, or stock or shares of or in any public company, standing in his name, or in the name of a trustee for him, a judge of one of the superior courts may, on the application of the judgment creditor, "order that such stock, funds, annuities, or shares, or such of them, or such part thereof respectively, as he shall think fit, shall be charged with the payment of the amount for which judgment shall have been so recovered, and interest thereon, and such order shall entitle the judgment creditor to all such remedies as he would have been entitled to if such charge had been made in his favour by the judgment debtor." In Watts v. Porter, which was an action against an attorney for negligence in lending his client's money on the security of a mortgage of an equitable interest in a sum of stock, without giving notice of the mortgage to the trustees of the stock, the loan was made in 1844; in 1847 two creditors of the mortgagor recovered judgment against him for a debt exceeding the value of the stock, and in 1848 obtained a judge's order charging the stock with the judgment debt, which order was regularly entered on the books of the Bank of England, and notified to the trustees of the stock. The debtor was subsequently discharged by the Insolvent Debtors Court; and it was held by Lord Campbell, C.J., and Wightman and Crompton, J.J., (dissentiente Erle, J.), that the charge created by the judge's order had priority over the mortgage; for it was by no means to be imputed to the Legislature, that in speaking of a charge it did not contemplate a fraudulent charge as much as an honest one. They relied on the doctrine in Dearle v. Hall and Lovell v. Cooper, (3 Russ. 1), that "whenever persons treating for a chose in action do not give notice to the trustee or executor who is the legal holder of the fund, they do not perfect their title, and they do not do all that is necessary in order to make the thing belong to them in preference to all other persons." Lord Campbell, in delivering judgment for himself and his colleagues, said, "Every tribunal administering justice according to the statute must consider only the effect intended by the Legislature to be given to the charging order; and this is to be learned from the language in which the meaning of the Legislature is expressed, without interpolating something not to be found. In the 14th section it gives in the most unequivocal terms the same remedies to the judgment creditor who has obtained the charging order to which he would have been entitled 'if such charge had been made in his favour by the judgment debtor.' The defendant's counsel contended that we are bound to understand the word 'honestly' to be implied, and that the charging order is only to have the effect which a charge of the debtor would have had if made honestly. To interpolate the word 'honestly' would, we think, be a qualification of the enactment wholly unauthorised. The words that are to be understood as implied by the Legislature, we think, are, 'validly and effectually.'" [Is not this "interpolating something not to be found?"] "The debtor could not validly and effectually make a charge to have priority over an antecedent equitable charge to which the incumbrancer has completed his title, and therefore the charging order has no such operation; but the first incumbrancer not having completed his title by notice to the trustees, the debtor might make a charge to a subsequent incumbrancer, which in point of law would be valid and effectual. At the time of this charging order the stock still continued to stand in the names of the trustees, in trust for the judgment debtor; till notice from the mortgagee, they were not trustees for her; and immediately after notice of the charging order, they became trustees for the judgment creditor." The short answer to this appears to be a denial of the assumption that the trustees of the stock were not trustees for the mortgagee before notice. It is perfectly clear that they became so immediately upon the making of the mortgage, and that a voluntary assignment of the stock by the mortgagor, perfected by notice to the trustees, would have passed nothing more than the equity of redemption. From the date of the mortgage the trustees held the stock in trust for the mortgagee, and subject to the satisfaction of his charge, in trust for his mortgagor. It was upon this last trust alone that the charging order operated. Thus, if after the first mortgage the mortgagor had made a second mortgage of the stock, (even without notice of the first), the second mortgagee would, by virtue of his mortgage merely, take nothing but a charge on the equity of redemption; and if he had notice of the first mortgage when he made his advance, he could not enlarge his right by diligence in giving notice to the trustees. Would notice of the first mortgage to the judgment creditor before obtaining his judgment, or before obtaining his charging order, or before giving intimation to the trustees, confine his charge to the equity of redemption, in the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench? Nothing can be clearer or more conclusive than the following concise summary of the doctrine in Whitworth v. Gaugain given by Erle, J., in the case under consideration:—

"The debtor's interest only is charged, for the condition in the statute for the charge is, that there should be stock standing in the name of a trustee, in trust for the debtor. Now, if the debtor has already assigned the stock without notice to the trustee, it is not standing in trust for him, but in trust for the assignee—at least, as between these parties. The assignee could at any time compel the trustee to transfer the stock to him, and neither the debtor nor the trustee could resist the claim of such assignee on the ground that he had given no notice to the trustee; and what is true of an assignment of the whole stock is true of a partial charge thereon.

"It is admitted that this would be the effect of the charging order upon stock standing in the debtor's name, and equitably mortgaged by him before the charging order. The equitable mortgagee would have priority; for the debtor would be trustee of the stock for him, and the stock would not be standing in his name on his own behalf. It is not probable that the Legislature intended to give a greater effect to the order upon stock standing in the name of a trustee than it would have upon stock standing in the debtor's name.

"Also the charge intended by the statute must be taken to be a lawful charge; for it is not to be supposed that the Legislature intended to force the debtor into the situation of a breaker of the law. Now, if the debtor made a lawful charge on stock, he would either specify his interest therein, or charge it subject to outstanding incumbrances. The compulsory charge by a judgment creditor is analogous to a charge expressed to be on such interest as the debtor might have; and if worded in that way, the charge would give no right beyond what the debtor had, as a charge so worded seems to be notice to the creditor taking it to inquire. The second charge would not take priority over the first, unless the debtor charged as unincumbered that which was incumbered; if he did so, he would clearly violate the law, so far as to be liable to an action of tort for the damage arising from the false representation. If he asserted expressly that it was unincumbered, and obtained the advance by that falsehood, he would be indictable for a false pretence. The judgment creditor, therefore, would not be entitled to priority over the first mortgagee if the charge intended in sect. 11 is a lawful charge.

"Furthermore, the claim to take the stock from the first mortgagee is not a remedy against the debtor, for he has lost the stock in any event, but a remedy against the first mortgagee—a remedy given upon the general principle for deciding which of two innocent claimants shall suffer by the fraud of a third party, viz. he who facilitated the fraud. Such is the doctrine of Loveridge v. Cooper. Now, a judgment creditor is in no analogy with a second mortgagee who has been deceived into taking as unincumbered a security that was incumbered. The judgment creditor has trusted to no particular security; he has rights which may be made to charge all the available assets of the debtor, and among the rest his [equity of redemption of the] stock; but he has advanced nothing on the stock, and has been in no way deceived in respect thereof; and the judgment debtor, by suffering judgment, has not used deception, nor been guilty of fraud. The reason, therefore, for giving priority to a second mortgagee over a first wholly fails in respect of a judgment creditor."

It will be seen that the Court of Queen's Bench, in deciding Watts v. Porter, has committed precisely the same mistake which Lord Cottenham made on the first hearing of Whitworth v. Gaugain, and which he subsequently corrected. We confidently anticipate that the authority of Whitworth v. Gaugain will be restored by a reversal of the decision in Watts v. Porter.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

In Wright v. Lord Maidstone, (before Sir W. P. Wood, V. C.), a bill praying that the defendant might be decreed to pay the amount of his acceptances, which had been destroyed, was held defective on demurrer, upon the ground that the remedy was at law, a distinction being drawn between cases where a bill of exchange is lost and where it is destroyed. This distinction has lost much of its force since the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, as by sect. 87 of that act, in any action upon a bill of exchange or other negotiable instrument, the court or a judge may order that the loss of such instrument shall not be set up, provided an indemnity is given, to the satisfaction of the court or judge or master, against the claims of any other person upon such negotiable instrument.

The Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes Bill received the royal assent on the 23rd July. The following clauses were proposed by Lord Brougham, but afterwards withdrawn, in order to prevent the bill from being thrown out this session:—

“(A.) All bills of exchange and promissory notes shall for the purposes of this act, as hereinafter provided, be noted, or noted and protested, as in the case of foreign bills of exchange.

“(B.) It shall be lawful for the holder of a bill of exchange or promissory note which has on the day of its becoming due been noted for non-payment, and which bill of exchange or promissory note is free from erasure or alteration in any material part, except by striking out the name or names of an indorser or indorsers, to proceed under the provisions of this act, hereinafter contained, at any time after protest for non-acceptance or for non-payment, and before the expiration of six months after the day of such bill or note becoming due; provided such holder shall on or at any time previous to the day of such bill or note becoming due have been the holder thereof, or liable for the amount of the same.

“(C.) In each of the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer of Pleas, the junior Master shall be the registrar of protested bills of exchange and promissory notes, and shall keep a register for the registration of protested bills of exchange and promissory notes.

“(D.) Every holder of a dishonoured bill of exchange or promissory note which is free from erasure or alteration in any material part, except as aforesaid, may, after protest, register such bill of exchange or promissory note in the register of any of the aforesaid courts, and shall thereupon be entitled to an order of such court, on such bill of exchange or promissory note, against the acceptor of such bill or the maker of such note, for payment of the same, with interest and costs, within twelve days after service of such order, inclusive of such service; and such order shall be issued and signed by the registrar of protested bills of exchange and promissory notes of the court in which such bill or note is registered, and shall be in the form contained in Schedule (C.) to this act annexed; and upon the expiration of such twelve days after personal service of such order on such acceptor or maker, or after an order for leave to proceed, in the same manner as provided by the Common-law Procedure Act, 1852, in the case of writs of summons, without such payment having been made as aforesaid, or without leave obtained to appear and defend, as has been hereinbefore provided in cases where a summons under this act has issued on any bill of exchange or promissory note, the said order shall have the effect of a judgment against such acceptor or maker, and may be registered as such, and execution may issue thereon against such acceptor or maker, on affidavit of the service of such order, or of having proceeded according to leave obtained, which affidavit shall be indorsed on such order or annexed thereto: provided always, that where leave has been obtained to appear and defend, the holder of such bill or note shall declare thereon against the acceptor or maker, in the same manner as if the appearance entered by such leave had been to a writ of summons, and such order on such leave obtained shall in all respects be treated as a writ of summons: provided also, that after judgment the court or a judge may, under special circumstances, set aside the judgment, and, if necessary, stay or set aside execution, and may give leave to appear to the order, and to defend the action, if it shall appear to the court or judge reasonable so to do, and on such terms as to the court or judge may seem just.”

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Mr. Craufurd called the attention of the House to the Report of the Statute-law Commission, and complained of the insertion of an Appendix by Mr. B. Ker which had not been sanctioned by the commissioners, and in which some reflections were cast upon the expurgatory list drawn up by Mr. Anstey and Mr. Rogers. One of these gentlemen, Mr. Rogers, had not, from absence, been able to take notice of the reflection cast upon his labours; but Mr. Anstey, he believed, had handed in a reply, which he trusted would be published without delay.

Mr. Walpole would inquire into the circumstances under which the papers referred to by the hon. and learned gentleman had been appended to the Report; and it would also be matter of consideration whether the answer to which he had made reference should or should not be published.

PRISONERS TRIED AT ASSIZES.—A return obtained by Mr. Cowper, M.P., shews that the total number of prisoners tried at the assizes of England and Wales from 1850 to 1855, including a space of five years, was as follows:—viz. on the Home Circuit, 2501, (including the prisoners tried before commissioners not judges); on the Midland Circuit, 2740; on the Norfolk Circuit, 2093; on the Northern Circuit, 2235; on the Oxford Circuit, 4223; on the Western Circuit, 3493; and on the South Wales and Chester Circuit, 975.

FIRST REPORT OF THE COUNTY COURTS COMMISSION.

But the point on which I differ from the majority of the commissioners respects the meaning which ought to be attached to the phrase “small claims and small disputes.” So far as actions on contract are concerned, I think that the Legislature has wisely limited the quasi exclusive jurisdiction of the county courts to cases in which the sum recovered does not exceed 20*l.*; but in actions on tort the present limit of 5*l.* is, in my judgment, far too low.

In the first place, the boundary line between actions on contract and actions on tort has been, to a great extent, obliterated since the passing of the Common-law Procedure Act of 1852. Take, for example, the ordinary case of an action against a carrier for the loss of a parcel intrusted to him. The declaration may be framed, and generally is framed, in such a form as equally to apply to assumpsit or to case. The action is tried at Nisi Prius, and a verdict for 10*l.* is given. Is the plaintiff to be deprived of costs or not? A cloud of instances might be furnished in which similar doubts would arise, and this constitutes the first objection to the present system.

Next, let it be assumed that a man illegally detains another's goods. The owner has the option of bringing either an action of trover or an action of detinue. If he brings the former, and recovers a verdict for 6*l.*, he is entitled to his costs; but if he brings the latter, and the goods are valued at 19*l.*, he is deprived of costs unless the judge certifies. The same result follows in the case of the carrier just put, if the plaintiff, instead of framing his declaration ambiguously so as to suit either assumpsit or case, chooses to select a particular form. His right to costs may thus depend on the taste or skill of his special pleader. I submit that this law is absurd.

Thirdly, it appears to me, as a general rule, that actions on tort involve less difficult points of law than actions on contract; and if this be so, it follows that a judge who has sufficient legal knowledge to be intrusted with the decision of the latter class of cases up to 20% is at least equally competent to deal with the former class to the like amount. A large proportion of actions on tort consists either of assaults or of collisions, and these cases seldom present any legal difficulty. The law with respect to assaults is at present sufficiently anomalous. The party who is assaulted has the option of proceeding either civilly or criminally. If he proceeds criminally, the matter is either summarily disposed of by a magistrate, or it forms the subject of an indictment, which is generally tried at the quarter sessions. In either event it may be reasonably presumed that the judge is a less sound lawyer than the judges of the county courts. No one complains of this jurisdiction, or ventures to assert that the magistrates are incompetent to deal with these cases in a satisfactory manner. Then, assuming them to be competent, on what principle can it be urged, that if the party assaulted, instead of treating the matter as a public wrong, elects to regard it as a private injury, he should be allowed to call in aid the machinery of a superior court, and to put his adversary to needless and vexatious expense, when he has an opportunity of obtaining redress before a county court? If it be urged that difficult questions of fact sometimes arise in cases of assault and collision, and that a jury is more competent to weigh conflicting evidence than a judge, my answer is, that at the instance of either party a jury may be summoned in the county court; and I have never heard it hinted that a county court jury of five is not as capable of unravelling facts and of assessing damages as a jury of twelve when sitting at Nisi Prius.

A fourth reason which induces me to recommend that the distinction with respect to costs between actions on contract and actions on tort should be abolished is this—that such an alteration in the law would have a powerful tendency to check vexatious and speculative actions, which are now too often brought at the instigation of disreputable attorneys for the mere sake of costs. It is notorious that these actions are principally brought for alleged torts; and it would be difficult to over-estimate the discredit which is cast upon the profession of the law and the administration of justice by their frequent occurrence. What adds to the evil is, that in these cases the defendant has no power, by paying money into court, to escape the infliction of costs, and consequently he is compelled, whenever he has rendered himself liable to be sued at all, either to submit to the extortionate demands of the plaintiff or of his attorney, and to compromise the action on unreasonable terms, or to proceed to trial with a full consciousness that in addition to the 8% or 10% which the jury may award as damages, he will be required to pay at least ten or twelve times that amount in the shape of costs. Now, if this class of actions could only be brought in the county courts—and they could not be brought in the superior courts if damages not exceeding 20% did not carry costs—they would seldom be brought at all, because the fees allowed to attorneys who practise in the county courts are not sufficiently large to induce them to trade in speculative litigation.

Lastly, I am emboldened in recommending this change in the law by the reflection, that so long as the presiding judge at Nisi Prius has the power of securing to the plaintiff his costs by certifying that the cause was a fit one to be tried before him, no danger need be apprehended from the circumstance, which must occasionally happen, of a jury taking an illiberal view of the matter, and assessing the damages at an unexpectedly low figure. In these cases, and indeed in all others which might either present peculiar difficulties or might otherwise be deserving of more than ordinary investigation, it is to be presumed that the judge would discharge his duty and grant a certificate. This certificate is, in fact, the safety-valve of the plan. No doubt it has been urged in some quarters, that to enable the judge to grant a certificate to carry costs, is to invest him with a delicate discretion which will not be exercised either on a uniform principle, or otherwise in a way to afford satisfaction to suitors. I however entertain no apprehensions on this score. I have entire confidence in the integrity and sound judgment of the Bench. I feel persuaded that the judges both can and will discharge this duty, however delicate it may be, with becoming propriety. They already have the power when the verdict does not exceed 5%, and it cannot make any possible difference if that power be somewhat extended, so as to meet cases where the plaintiff does not recover more than 20%.

Having now stated my reasons for recommending the change, I venture to reply to the objections which I have heard urged against the plan.

These objections are threefold.

First, it is contended that a marked difference exists between contracts and torts; for when an action is brought on a contract, the plaintiff knows what sum he is entitled to recover; but when he sues in tort, he has no means of estimating what amount of damages ought to be awarded to him.

This proposition I respectfully deny. When a man sues for an ascertained debt, it may be said that he knows what sum is due to him; but in a vast number of actions on contract the claim is for unliquidated damages; and here the plaintiff is in no better position than if he were suing in an action on tort. Besides, it is not correct to say that the plaintiff has no means of estimating what amount he ought to recover when he sues for unliquidated damages, whether in an action on tort or contract. He has ample means for forming at least a rough estimate; and as the county courts have concurrent jurisdiction with the superior courts in claims up to 50%, it is only on occasions when the plaintiff estimates his own damages at a sum exceeding 50%, and the jury assess the damages at 20% or less, that he need run any risk of being deprived of costs. In a case of this nature it may to a certain extent be hard upon the plaintiff to lose his costs in consequence of having taken an erroneous view of the injury he has sustained; but it is surely still harder on the defendant to make him pay an unreasonable amount of costs, which would not have been incurred but through the plaintiff's error.

The above argument, of course, assumes that the jury have pronounced a rational verdict; but the next objection to the plan rests on the assumption that juries are in the habit of giving most capricious verdicts, and that one jury will often give 5% or 10%, when another jury, on precisely similar facts, will award 50% or 500%. If this statement be true, it amounts to a very grave reflection on trial by jury, and it furnishes, to my mind, one of the strongest arguments in favour of a plan for transferring the settlement of "small disputes" to a less capricious tribunal. If such serious injustice be frequently done in the superior courts, it may be well worth while to try the effect of a court in which the litigants, if they think fit, can have the benefit of the opinion of a judge without the intervention of a jury. If the statement be not true—and I hope that it is not—cadit questio, the objection based upon it falls to the ground.

STARKIE'S LAW OF EVIDENCE.—NEW EDITION

A PRACTICAL TREATISE OF THE LAW OF EVIDENCE. By THOMAS STARKIE, Esq. Fourth Edition, with very considerable alterations and additions; incorporating the Statutes and reported Cases to the time of publication. By G. M. DOWDESWELL and J. G. MALCOLM, Esqrs., Barristers at Law. Just published, in 1 vol. royal 8vo., price 11. 16s. cloth.

"Fortunately for the Profession, the new edition has been intrusted to gentlemen, of whom one is well known, not only as a ripe and accomplished lawyer, (doctrinae malinus), but as a judicious editor, knowing how to withhold as well as how to apply his hand. Amid the present plague of reports mere industry is not sufficient to qualify even a second-rate editor. . . . It is evident that the editors have not been blinded by their respect for the author, but have altered, corrected, and amended wherever they have seen occasion. Such a course could not be pursued safely upon a small stock of learning or of judgment; and in our opinion it has been pursued, not only with safety, but with manifest advantage to the book; so that the fourth edition of Starkie is to the existing law what the first edition was to the law in 1824. . . . We wish we had some means of identifying Mr. Malcolm's portions of the work. As it is, being hitherto unknown in authorship, he must be content with the praise of having borne a part where all was good."—Jurist.

"It is also the only work of which a new edition has been brought out at such a time as to render it possible that it should apply to practice, with any degree of consideration and accuracy, the modern changes in the law. . . . We think the editors will have gone far towards restoring the admirable work of Mr. Starkie to its original character of the best work on the law of evidence which has yet been produced."—Legal Observer.

The attention of the Profession is invited to the advantages offered by this Office to Solicitors and their Clients, which will be found to be greater than in most other Life Offices.

ADVANTAGES TO THE ASSURED.

1. Four-fifths of the Profits are divided triennially amongst the Assured.

In some Offices the Assured may not be entitled to a Bonus until the expiration of ten years from the time of effecting the Policy, whilst in this Office three years is the utmost limit.

2. At the first division of Profits in May, 1853, a Reversionary Bonus, averaging 451. per cent., was declared on all Participating Policies. In some cases the Bonus exceeded 611. per cent. on the premiums paid.

On reference to the Prospectuses of some of the principal Offices, it will be found that the Bonus on their first division was much less, viz. 294. per cent.

3. The next division of Profits will be declared in May, 1856, when all Policies effected in 1855 will participate.

In most Offices Assured do not participate in the Profits until after payment of from three to five annual premiums, but in this Office they may participate on payment of a single premium.

ADVANTAGES TO THE PROFESSION.

A Commission of 101. per cent. is allowed on the first year's premium, and 51. per cent. annually afterwards; and, as an additional advantage to persons introducing business, the Shareholders have by the Deed of Settlement given up half of their Profits for the benefit of such persons as extra Commission.

The extra Commission paid in 1853 to persons introducing business was as follows:—

Ordinary Commission paid.	Extra Commission paid.
£75 16 0	£54 12 11
188 9 3	135 7 3

THE JURIST.

LONDON, AUGUST 11, 1855.

THE case of Larpent and Others v. Bibby and Others, decided on the 23rd of last month in the House of Lords, involved several important points upon those clauses of the Bankrupt-law Consolidation Act, 1849, which relate to arrangements by deed between a trader and his creditors. It will be remembered that this class of sections was framed for the purpose of bringing such arrangements within the operation and scope of the bankrupt laws without the publicity of bankruptcy: they introduced a new principle into the administration of affairs between debtor and creditor, by enabling a certain proportion of the creditors absolutely to bind others having a joint interest with themselves; and although it was to be worked out by a machinery well understood, and to be subject to analogies well established, the system has hitherto been regarded as an experiment by no means free from difficulty and danger. It has been frequently found in practice, that what was convenient for the parties did not appear to be sanctioned by the statute, and that what was clearly allowed by the statute did not suit the views of any of the parties concerned. We therefore welcome a decision of the highest legal tribunal upon the subject, although, like prior decisions in pari materia, it leaves several moot points undecided, and as doubtful as ever.

The clauses in question range from sect. 224 to sect. 229 inclusive. The 224th section is as follows:—"Every deed or memorandum of arrangement now or hereafter entered into between such trader* and his creditors, and signed by or on behalf of six-sevenths in number and value of those creditors whose debts amount to 10*l.* and upwards, touching such trader's liabilities and his release therefrom, and the distribution, inspection, conduct, management, and mode of winding up of his estate, or all or any of such matters, or any matter having reference thereto, shall, subject to the conditions hereinafter mentioned, be as effectual and obligatory in all respects, upon all the creditors who shall not have signed such deed or memorandum of arrangement, as if they had duly signed the same; and such deed or memorandum, when so signed, shall not be, or be liable to be, disturbed or impeached by reason of any prior or subsequent act of bankruptcy: provided always, that every creditor shall be accounted a creditor in value in respect of such amount only as upon an account fairly stated, after allowing the value of mortgaged property and other such available securities or liens from such trader, shall appear to be the balance due to him."

By sect. 225 such deed is not to be binding upon any creditor who has not signed it until after the expiration of three months from the time at which the creditor had notice from the trader of his suspension of payment and of such deed of arrangement, unless within such time the trader obtain an order or certificate of the Court that the deed has been duly signed*; and no creditor who shall not have had fourteen days' notice of an intended application for the order or certificate shall be bound by it.

By sect. 228 the creditors are to have the same rights as to set-off, mutual credit, lien, and priority, and joint and separate assets are to be distributed in like manner as in bankruptcy.

The chief question which has arisen under these sections is, whether the deed, in order to be valid, must provide for the distribution of the whole of the trader's property, or whether the six-sevenths are not to exercise a discretion in this respect that shall bind the remaining creditors. After conflicting decisions, (Drew v. Collins, 6 Exch. 670; Tesley v. Taylor, 1 El. & Bl. 521; Phillips v. Surridge, 1 Lownd., M., & P. 458), it was decided by the Court of Exchequer Chamber that the deed must provide for the distribution of the whole of the trader's estate, as in bankruptcy. (Tesley v. Taylor, 1 El. & Bl. 521, 532; and see Cooper v. Thornton, Id. 544, and Fisher v. Bell, 12 C. B. 363). This question was also raised in the House of Lords, but it became unnecessary to decide it. Parke, B., however, said that there was some difference of opinion among the learned judges with regard to it, "although it was not at all unlikely that on further consideration they might all be of the same opinion."

Upon another question submitted to the judges they were unanimous, viz. that a deed of arrangement between a trader and his creditors, which had been completed in all respects, and under which his property had been conveyed before the Bankrupt-law Consolidation Act, 1849, came into operation, (11th October, 1849), was not a deed of arrangement within the meaning of the 224th section, nor could it be pleaded as a defence to an action brought by a creditor who had not signed it. That section, it was said, applied only to deeds executed after the act came into force, and perhaps also to deeds which were then in an inchoate state, as was intimated in Wagh v. Middleton, (8 Exch. 352). See also, as to the statute not being retrospective, Marsh v. Higgins, (1 Lownd., M., & P. 253).

It was suggested by the learned judges as being the true construction, that the word "now" in the section applies only to the words "memorandum of arrangement" and not to the word "deeds." But, at all events, it was said not to apply to a deed so far acted upon that a creditor, after the act came into operation, could not be put on an equal footing with those who had signed the deed, if he chose to come in under it; and it did not appear in the case before the House of Lords that the creditor, against whom the deed was set up, could then be placed in a position of equality. The deed bore date in 1847, and provided for the payment of a dividend in March, 1848; the material points in it were these:—It recited a meeting of the creditors held in the preceding October, at which it had been resolved that a deed of arrangement should be entered into; and then stated, that in pursuance of such resolution each of the partners in the debtors' firm covenanted that they would carry on business under the superintendence of certain inspectors appointed by the creditors. It then provided that the debtors should proceed to get in their estate and effects, and that the monies should be held by them in trust, in the first place, to pay the salaries of the clerks and other servants; secondly, to defray the expenses connected with the trust; and, thirdly, to pay dividends to creditors who had signed; and there was also a provision that these creditors who should subsequently come in under the deed should also receive dividends out of the estate, but so as not to disturb any previous dividends.

Another important question was raised in the case, viz. whether the deed was void as making the estate distributable among, not all the creditors, but those only who should execute the deed. The learned judges expressed a doubt on this point, Parke, B., stating that they should clearly have thought it void, except that such a deed is in practice common, and that in all cases of a conveyance for the benefit of creditors it is for the distribution of the estate among the creditors parties to the deed. "But," his Lordship added, "if we cannot take notice of that, as probably we ought not, the deed is void on that account also."

It may be observed with reference to this part of the case, that a deed under the statute binds those who do not sign it, while an ordinary composition deed has a binding effect only on those who execute it. In the former case, therefore, there are strong reasons for saying that the distribution should be amongst all the creditors.

With reference to other points in the case his Lordship added, "It is unnecessary to say whether the notice of the deed simply, or notice of its having been executed by six-sevenths of the creditors, is requisite, or to decide upon the other objections to the plea, which are, however, probably unfounded."

WE cannot have expressed our meaning so clearly as we intended in our observations on Watts v. Porter, for a correspondent asks us whether that case may not be reconciled with Whitworth v. Gaugain by the consideration that notice is necessary to perfect a title to a chose in action by assignment, which was not done in Watts v. Porter, while in Whitworth v. Gaugain the equitable title of the mortgagee was perfect. The contention in Whitworth v. Gaugain was between a mortgagee who had an equitable title and a subsequent judgment creditor who had a legal title to whatever his judgment covered, which would prevail over the mortgagee's equitable title if it covered the mortgaged property. Lord Cottenham at first thought that the judgment and the mortgagee's title were in conflict; and if that had been so, of course the judgment would have prevailed; but that view was ultimately corrected, and it was held that the judgment only bound what the debtor had at the time, namely, the equity of redemption. In Watts v. Porter the contention was between a mortgagee of a chose in action who had not given notice to the trustees, and a subsequent judgment creditor who obtained a charging order, and by giving notice to the trustees acquired a title which would prevail over that of the mortgagee, so far as they were inconsistent. The only question was, did the judgment or the charging order bind more than that which belonged to the debtor at the time, namely, the equity of redemption. Whitworth v. Gaugain decided that it did not—Watts v. Porter decided that it did; and the two cases are, therefore, in conflict. The Court expressly stated that they put the same construction on the 13th as on the 14th section of the act. The mistake of the Court of Queen's Bench consisted rather in supposing that the judgment and charging order had the same effect that an express charge of the property as unincumbered would have had, than in a misapprehension of the doctrine of Dearle v. Hall, &c. Lord Campbell's remarks on the impropriety of interpolating the word "honestly" in the act of Parliament are as inconsistent with the doctrine of Whitworth v. Gaugain as they are startling to the moral instincts of common men. The Court did not deny that the mortgagee obtained a title without giving notice, but said that his title would be postponed to a subsequent title to the same thing perfected by notice; all of which was undeniable elementary law; but they added, overruling Whitworth v. Gaugain, that the judgment and charging order gave a title to a thing which did not at the time belong to the mortgagor. When the Courts speak of perfecting a title to a chose in action by giving notice, they merely mean making it safe against a subsequent assignee who bargains for the same thing. When the statute gives a judgment creditor a charge on the debtor's property, it is generally thought not to mean property which he has previously sold to another.

After the above remarks were written we received the letter which we print below. Our correspondent will see that we dissent from his first proposition. The case he puts of a mortgage to A., who gives no notice, followed by a judgment and charging order in favour of B. duly notified, and that followed by an actual mortgage to C., who takes without notice of A.'s title, and gives notice to the trustee, seems to us to present no difficulty. Suppose A.'s mortgage to be for 1000*l.*, and C.'s 800*l.*; in that case C. would stand in the place of A. to the extent of 800*l.*, and A. would come next for the remaining 200*l.*; after which the judgment creditor would come in; and if C.'s charge were the larger—say 1200*l.*—then C. would stand in A.'s place to the extent of A.'s charge, and as to the remaining 200*l.*, would come after the judgment creditor.

We repeat that the whole question is, whether the statute is intended honestly to charge only what belongs to the debtor, or, as Lord Campbell prefers to read it, dishonestly to charge what belongs to another.

NOTES ON RECENT STATUTES.

By the stat. 18 & 19 Vict. c. 51, the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts in suits for defamation is abolished, and persons in custody for defamation under the order of any ecclesiastical court are to be discharged; but such order is not to be made unless the costs incurred in the suit are paid, or unless the person against whom such costs have been decreed has already suffered imprisonment for one month in consequence of the non-payment thereof.

The stat. 18 & 19 Vict. c. 67, (Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes Act), comes into force on the 24th October next, and provides a summary proceeding by which judgment may be obtained on personal service of a special writ of summons, unless the defendant pay into court the sum indorsed on the writ, or shew a defence on the merits to the satisfaction of a judge.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—I venture to dissent from your article in the last JURIST (ante, p. 313) on the case of Watts v. Porter. The following reasons seem to me to establish the correctness of the decision pronounced by the majority of the judges.

The stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 14, empowers a judge to order that stock standing in the name of a judgment debtor in his own right, or in the name of any person in trust for him, shall stand charged with the amount of the judgment recovered against him; and having thus provided for the creation of a charge, it goes on to declare the remedies incident to it, viz. all such remedies as the creditor would have been entitled to if the charge had been made by the debtor in person. The latter of these provisions seems to me to be of minor importance; it merely furnishes the means by which the benefit of the charge is to be obtained. It is the former provision which creates the charge itself.

Now, when a charging order has been made, a de facto charge is constituted. Upon what? Upon the stock. So says the act. But suppose the judgment debtor, being cestui que trust of the stock, has mortgaged it, what does the charge take effect upon? Still, I say, upon the stock, but upon stock which is subject to a mortgage. It is not merely a charge upon so much stock as might remain after deducting the amount of the mortgage. The mortgage might be paid off, and then the charge would clearly affect the whole fund.

Thus far, I believe, we shall agree—at least, in substance. But then observe the distinction between the two cases, of a mortgage of which notice has been given to the trustee, and one of which no such notice has been given. In the former case the judgment creditor has obtained his charge subject to a mortgage, the priority of which is fixed and indefeasible. In the latter case he takes subject to a mortgage which is liable to be postponed (by act subsequent) in favour of a new chargee using greater diligence than the mortgagee. This would clearly be the case in favour of an actual chargee under the hand of the judgment debtor, and I am at a loss to see why it should be otherwise with reference to the statutory chargee; nor can I discover how the priorities of the parties could possibly be settled if the third incumbrancer could claim to stand above the first, while the second was postponed to the first, but not to the third.

The real question is not so much one of construction of a statute, as a question of equity applied to the new circumstances created by the statute. A statutory charge being created, is it or is it not according to equity that this new charge should be subject to the same rules as to diligence and priority as other charges? Are not the same reasons applicable to both? and would it not be most inconvenient to act upon a new rule? Surely it would be very dangerous to exempt the judgment creditor from the necessity of giving notice of his charge in order to secure his priority over a subsequent incumbrancer; and if so, he could not in fairness be deprived of a corresponding advantage as against an earlier incumbrancer.

A BARRISTER.

MR. TIDD PRATT has written the following letter, dated the 27th July, to the editor of The Times upon the new statute relating to friendly societies:—

"Sir,—Through the medium of your columns I would call the particular attention of the members of friendly societies to some of the provisions of the new Friendly Society Act, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, which received the royal assent on the 23rd inst., and is to come into operation on the 1st August.

"By the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, all the previous acts relating to these societies are repealed, except as to subsisting societies, although nearly the whole of the sections are made applicable to such societies.

"Friendly societies in future can only be established—

"1. For insuring a sum of money to be paid on the birth of a member's child, or on the death of a member, or for the funeral expenses of the wife or child of a member.

"2. For the relief or maintenance of the members, their husbands, wives, children, brothers or sisters, nephews or nieces, in old age, sickness, or widowhood, or the endowment of members, or nominees of members, at any age.

"3. For any purpose which shall be authorised by one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, or in Scotland by the Lord Advocate, as a purpose to which the powers and facilities of the act ought to be extended; and the sum to be assured on any contingency is increased to 200*l.*, but no annuity is to exceed 30*l.* per annum.

"No money is to be paid for the funeral expenses of a child except upon production of a copy of the entry on the register of deaths; and if such entry shall not state that the cause of death has been certified by a qualified medical practitioner, then a certificate signed by a qualified medical practitioner, stating the probable cause of death, shall be required; and the sum payable for the funeral expenses of a child under five not to exceed 6*l.*, and of a child between five and ten not to exceed 10*l.*

"By sect. 16 the trustees of a friendly society may purchase, build, hire, or take on lease any building for the purpose of holding the meetings of the society.

"By sect. 24 a remedy is given, by application to justices, against any officer, &c. who shall wilfully apply any part of the funds to purposes other than those expressed or directed in the rules.

"A provision is made against circulating copies of rules or alterations as being certified by the registrar, when they have not been so certified.

"By sect. 32 further facilities (than those in the former acts) of investing the funds of friendly societies are given, as well as, by sect. 33, extended powers to the registrar to order the transfer of stock and money in savings banks when a trustee is absent from England, &c., or has been removed from office, &c.

"With respect to the settlement of disputes, considerable alteration has been made in the law. The rules may direct the manner in which disputes between a member, or person claiming on account of a member, or under the rules, shall be decided; and the mode of enforcing the decision of the arbitrators, or of deciding disputes if no award is made &c., is by application to the county court; and after the 1st August next the power of justices to decide disputes, under rules which referred the decision to them, is taken away; and such disputes must, after that day, be referred to and decided by the county courts.

"By sect. 45 every society already or hereafter established is once in every year, in the month of January, February, or March, to transmit to the registrar a general statement of the funds and effects of such society during the past twelve months, or a copy of their last annual report.

"This provision supersedes the necessity of the annual return, required under the repealed acts, being sent to the registrar.

"In the case of a member in the militia serving out of the United Kingdom, the society have power in certain cases to demand an extra contribution during such service. (Sect. 47).

"There are no fees payable to the registrar for his certificate to rules or alterations after the 1st August next; and I am preparing a form of those rules required by the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, s. 25, which may shortly be obtained on application to me by letter prepaid.

"The importance of the subject must be my excuse for the length of this letter.

"JOHN TIDD PRATT."

FIRST REPORT OF THE COUNTY COURTS COMMISSION.

The only remaining objection is, that actions on tort are sometimes brought, not so much with the view of recovering substantial damages, as in order to vindicate the plaintiff's character by a public investigation; and that in these cases it would be unjust to deprive the plaintiff of costs merely because he did not obtain that which he never sought to obtain—a verdict for more than 20*l*.

This objection is open to several satisfactory answers. First, the cases are extremely rare in which character is sought to be vindicated in any form of action for tort over which the county court has jurisdiction.

Next, it may reasonably be urged that a trial in a county court affords in general as good an opportunity for vindicating character as a trial at the assizes.

The town in which the county court is held is usually nearer to the residence of the parties than the assize town is; the trial takes place sooner after the injury was inflicted; and the audience, especially in "small disputes," is more likely to consist of the personal friends and acquaintances of the litigants. In all these points, therefore, the county court has an advantage over the Court of Nisi Prius.

But assuming that the case were one in which the plaintiff could best attain his object of vindicating his character by a trial at the assizes, the judge would have no difficulty in granting a certificate, and thus the anticipated evil would fall to the ground.

For these reasons I think that the above objections to the plan are untenable, and I am not aware that any others have been urged.

Concurrent Jurisdiction of Superior Courts and County Courts where Parties live more than twenty Miles apart, &c.—The Report, (see ante, p. 264), after recommending that the rule depriving plaintiffs of costs in the superior courts should be extended to judgments by default, proceeds thus:—

"This deprivation of costs, however, we propose should be subject to the exceptions contained in sect. 128 of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, where the parties reside more than twenty miles apart, or the other circumstances contemplated by the section exist."

The above passage contains an indirect proposal to retain the law as laid down in sect. 128 of the County Court Act. From that proposal I dissent.

When the county courts were first established, it became a question of no trifling importance to determine in what district the trials should be held. Several alternatives were suggested. The cause might be heard either where the plaintiff lived or where the defendant lived, or the plaintiff might be the dominus litis, as in the superior courts, and be entitled to bring his action in whatever county court he thought fit, the defendant being at liberty to change the venue on sufficient grounds. After much deliberation, it was deemed expedient to enact, as a general rule, that the summons should issue in the district in which the defendant dwelt or carried on his business; but as it was felt that this rule would operate prejudicially to creditors who might either happen to reside at a great distance from their debtors, or who might have sold their goods in some district other than that in which their debtors live, an attempt was made to palliate the inconvenience by enacting, in sect. 128, that "where the plaintiff dwells more than twenty miles from the defendant, or where the cause of action did not arise wholly or in some material point within the jurisdiction of the court within which the defendant dwells or carries on his business, the action may be brought in the superior court, as if the act had not been passed."

The effect of this enactment is to confer on the superior courts a concurrent jurisdiction with the county courts in all cases where the parties dwell more than twenty miles apart, or where the cause of action arose either wholly or in part out of the jurisdiction of the district in which the defendant lives or conducts his business. In other words, the plaintiff who sues under these circumstances in any superior court will be entitled to his costs, although he recovers less than 20*l*. in an action on contract, or less than 5*l*. in an action on tort. Now, it appears to me that this is a very serious evil. So far as sect. 128 operates, it perpetuates the abuses which the establishment of the county courts was intended to remedy. The object of the county court system was to relieve suitors from the heavy costs of litigation in the superior courts where the matter in dispute was of small amount. That object is defeated by the enactment in question. The inconvenience which it was intended to meet may, in my opinion, be obviated without any of this costly machinery. My plan is as follows:—I propose to repeal so much of sect. 128 as is cited above, and in lieu thereof to enact, that in the cases there suggested the plaintiff shall have the option of suing in whatever county court he thinks fit, but that the court in which he elects to sue shall be empowered to change the venue at the instance of the defendant on special grounds.

DART'S VENDORS AND PURCHASERS.

A COMPENDIUM of the LAW and PRACTICE of VENDORS and PURCHASERS of REAL ESTATES; comprising the Authorities down to the Time of Publication. By J. HENRY DART, Esq., Barrister at Law. Second Edition. In 8vo., price 21s. boards.

"In the case of Ware v. Lord Eymont the Vice-Chancellor referred to this work in these terms:—'A learned text-writer on this subject, Mr. Dart, in a book of very great merit, his 'Vendors and Purchasers,' enters into a disquisition on this judgment,' &c."—18 Jurist, p. 372.

"In conclusion, we recommend this work to the practitioner as a complete book, and one that will warrant his confidence, and furnish able assistance in all matters relating to the sale and purchase of estates; and we think no better book can be read by students, for the purpose of giving them a condensed view of the subject, and enabling them to see the application of those principles and rules with which a general study of the law has furnished them."—Law Student's Magazine.

"Mr. Dart's labours have produced in this compendium a readable book for the use of beginners. He has paid particular attention to the attainment of a logical arrangement, and a clear and concise style. . . . Without sacrificing its character as an elementary treatise, Mr. Dart has also made an useful book of practice. . . . The work is well worthy of a place, not only in the general library, but in that selection of books which the working lawyer looks upon as his best tools; which come most readily to his hand, and which he gets to look upon as a part of himself."—Law Review, May 1, 1851.

"The work is short, readable, and very accurate. . . . With these quotations we will close our notice of a work which is obviously prepared with great care, and will, we think, become a standard text-book."—Jurist, March 2, 1851.

"Its plan is well arranged, the cases are carefully collected, the law is clearly expounded, and in every part of the treatise there is a great deal of learning. . . . The style is singularly compact."—Law Times, March 8, 1851.

The attention of the Profession is invited to the advantages offered by this Office to Solicitors and their Clients, which will be found to be greater than in most other Life Offices.

ADVANTAGES TO THE ASSURED.

1. Four-fifths of the Profits are divided triennially amongst the Assured.

In some Offices the Assured may not be entitled to a Bonus until the expiration of ten years from the time of effecting the Policy, whilst in this Office three years is the utmost limit.

2. At the first division of Profits in May, 1853, a Reversionary Bonus, averaging 451. per cent., was declared on all Participating Policies. In some cases the Bonus exceeded 611. per cent. on the premiums paid.

On reference to the Prospectuses of some of the principal Offices, it will be found that the Bonus on their first division was much less, viz. 291. per cent.

3. The next division of Profits will be declared in May, 1856, when all Policies effected in 1855 will participate.

In most Offices Assured do not participate in the Profits until after payment of from three to five annual premiums, but in this Office they may participate on payment of a single premium.

ADVANTAGES TO THE PROFESSION.

A Commission of 101. per cent. is allowed on the first year's premium, and 51. per cent. annually afterwards; and, as an additional advantage to persons introducing business, the Shareholders have by the Deed of Settlement given up half of their Profits for the benefit of such persons as extra Commission.

The extra Commission paid in 1853 to persons introducing business was as follows:—

Ordinary Commission paid.	Extra Commission paid.
275 16 0	254 12 11

THE JURIST.

LONDON, AUGUST 18, 1855.

THE practical result of the famous clauses in the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, allowing equitable defences to be pleaded in actions at law, appears at present to be this:—The Courts of Queen's Bench and Exchequer require that the facts set forth in the plea should be such as would entitle the defendant to an unconditional and perpetual injunction in the Courts of Chancery, otherwise they will not allow the plea. The Court of Common Pleas, however, does not go so far as to disallow a plea shewing grounds only for a conditional injunction, but permits it to be placed upon the record, for the purpose of having the construction of the statute in this respect settled in a more solemn manner. The question is one of considerable difficulty, as well as of great importance. The language of the statute throws little light upon the point; it mentions neither conditional nor unconditional injunctions, but allows a defendant to plead facts, which, if judgment were obtained in the action, would entitle him to “relief against such judgment on equitable grounds,” (sect. 83); and while, on the one hand, to hold that the relief must be unconditional tends to narrow the operation of the statute, on the other it is difficult to see how the Courts of common law, with their present system of procedure, can introduce conditions into their judgments which must be performed before the absolute remedy sought by the action can be attained, or the defence set up be rendered complete. Analogous proceedings, however, do exist in our common-law system: rules of court and writs of mandamus command acts to be performed, and impose conditions which may be enforced by attachment; the judgment in detinue is for the recovery of the goods claimed, or for their value; and now the court or a judge has power to order execution to issue for the return of the goods, without giving the defendant the option of retaining them upon paying the value assessed; and this rule may be enforced by process in the nature of a distress infinite. (See Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, sect. 78). In replevin also it is part of the judgment for the defendant that he should have a return of the goods replevied. It would not be departing very far from these precedents were the Courts to introduce into their judgments certain conditions to be performed—e. g. the execution of a deed or the reformation of a contract—before the successful party should be entitled to the full benefit of the verdict in his favour. If the learned judges feel that they have no power to mould their procedure for this purpose, a short act of Parliament would very soon obviate the difficulty.

We propose now briefly to consider the cases hitherto decided upon the subject, which will shew the views entertained with regard to it by our common-law as well as equity judges. In The Mines Royal Society v. Magnay (10 Exch. 489) a plea to an action for rent, shewing an agreement for a surrender of the lease, was disallowed, upon the ground that a Court of equity would have required the defendant to execute an actual surrender. Parke, B., there said, “In my opinion the equitable defence allowed to be pleaded by this statute means such a defence as would in a court of equity be a complete answer to the plaintiff's claim, and would, as such, afford sufficient ground for a perpetual injunction, granted absolutely, and without any conditions. But according to the statement in the plea, a Court of equity would not interfere, except upon the condition of the execution of a valid surrender by the defendant. We have no machinery by which we can compel the execution of a surrender.” The defendant thereupon filed his bill, and moved for an injunction to restrain the action, upon the same grounds as those contained in his plea. The injunction was granted upon the terms of his paying into court the amount claimed by the plaintiffs until the hearing of the cause. (Magnay v. The Mines Royal Society, 24 L. J., Ch., 413).

In accordance with their former holding, the Court of Exchequer allowed an equitable defence to be pleaded, with other pleas, (upon an affidavit of their truth), upon the ground that the facts alleged would entitle the defendant to an unconditional injunction in equity. (Steele v. Haddock, 10 Exch. 643). The Court of Queen's Bench have expressed an opinion similar to that of the Court of Exchequer, and decided, on demurrer, that a plea shewing grounds only for a temporary or conditional injunction was bad. Lord Campbell, C. J., said, "If the injunction is to be temporary or conditional in equity, at common law, we have no such judgment; and as we have no analogous judgment, we could not attempt to do justice between the parties without pronouncing, instead of a common-law judgment, an equitable decree; but we have no warrant to pronounce such a decree. . . . We cannot enter into equities and cross equities; we should, therefore, be unable to determine the fit conditions on which relief should be given. No power is conferred on us to pronounce a conditional judgment, and no process is provided by which we could enforce performance of this condition." (Woodhouse v. Farebrother, June 19, 1855; 25, Law T. 197). But in the Court of Common Pleas, Crowder, J., intimated that this was a narrow construction of the act; and the Court allowed a plea, open to this objection, to be placed upon the record, without expressing any opinion as to its ultimate fate upon demurrer, or in a court of error. (Chilton v. Carrington, 16 C. B. 206). To these may be added the case of Farebrother v. Welchman, (24 L. J., Ch., 410), before Sir R. T. Kindersley, V. C. There an action had been brought by the executor of a lunatic against an auctioneer to recover the proceeds of a sale of the lunatic's property, which the auctioneer had been employed to sell by the agent of the committee. The defendant pleaded equitable pleas of set-off, (shewing payments to and for the committee), and then filed a bill for an injunction, setting up the same case as in his pleas, and alleging complicated accounts. The Vice-Chancellor held, however, that there was nothing to shew that these accounts could not be taken at law, and that the pleas must be taken as shewing a good equitable defence to the action; and he refused the injunction, with costs.

Before quitting this subject, reference should be made to a decision closely connected with it. The Common-law Procedure Act, 1852, enacted, that in ejectment an issue might be made up at once, "without any pleadings," (sect. 178); but by the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, sect. 83, it was enacted that it should be lawful for the defendant "in any cause" to plead an equitable defence. A defendant in ejectment applied for leave to plead an equitable defence, but the Court of Common Pleas held that the former statute had abolished all pleadings in such an action, and that it was not affected by the subsequent statute. (Neave v. Asery, June 8, 1855; 1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 675).

WATTS v. PORTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—I hope you will be able to find room in THE JURIST for the following observations in support of my view of Watts v. Porter. If not, I must be content with submitting them to your private consideration.

My proposition is, that the charging order creates a charge upon the stock, but subject to the existing mortgage. It is upon the whole stock, viz. a specific property of which the mortgagor is the "owner in equity," and as to which the mortgagee has only a security, and not an ownership. The thing, therefore, which "belonged to the mortgagor at the time" of the charging order was stock, but stock in a particular predicament. This is in exact accordance with Whitworth v. Gaugain. But I apprehend that neither that case nor any other supports the idea that a mortgagor, quoad the thing mortgaged, is owner of only a part of it, either definite or indefinite. The term "equity of redemption" is a useful conventional expression, but is more descriptive of the rights of the mortgagor with reference to property than a definition of the property itself. It never was understood as referring to "the thing mortgaged, minus the amount of the mortgage money, or an equivalent to it."

Whether the mortgagor makes a subsequent charge, or a judge makes it for him, appears to me to make no difference with regard to the question, what is the subject of charge? Even in the former case I conceive it would be quite correct to say, that the mortgagor could only charge "that which belonged to him at the time." As soon as he has charged it, (call it what you will—whether equity of redemption or anything else), the effect is, that the new charge at once stands paise to the antecedent mortgage. But if the new charge afterwards gives notice to the trustee before the prior mortgagee has done so, the Court of Chancery will act against the fund in the same manner as if the mortgagor had at the time of the charge possessed, not an incumbered fund or equity of redemption, but a free fund or mere sum of stock. Whichever form of language you prefer, the effect is the same, and that effect is to give priority to the later incumbrancer. It is the act subsequent, and not the charge, that occasions the trans-mutation. What I demand is, that the like rules of equity should be applied to the statutory charge as to the personal charge, both being at first puisne charges, but rendered paramount by the superior diligence of those who have obtained them.

I cannot think you rightly appreciate Whitworth v. Gaugain. In that case the creditor, in his character of chargee, was subsequent in date to the mortgagee, both securities being equitable, and no question of notice involved. So far, therefore, priority of date of course prevailed. The important question there decided (upon the stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110) was, that the judgment creditor in respect of his legit should stand in the same position as before the statute. No such question arose in Watts v. Porter, nor did any question of notice arise in Whitworth v. Gaugain. The materials and principles of those cases were different from each other.

One word as to the "honesty." This scruple seems to have arisen from the fact that the statute gives the same "remedies" as if the debtor himself had executed the charge; whence it is inferred that the Legislature must have referred to such a charge as the debtor could execute without fraud. But I maintain that the word "remedies" relates merely to modes of proceeding for redress, e. g. filing a bill for foreclosure—a point quite collateral to the question of priority. If so, the argument from which it is attempted to raise a prejudice, by identifying the moral position of the Legislature with that of the debtor, is entirely displaced. As I observed in my former letter, it is the Legislature which makes the charge by its own independent authority, and in a different and earlier paragraph. I can see nothing more immoral in giving to a diligent judgment creditor an advantage over a prior negligent mortgagee, than in giving the like advantage to assignees in bankruptcy. The negligence of the mortgagee is the cause of his disaster in each case. The statute of Elizabeth as to fraudulent possession effects a precisely similar enactment for the benefit of individual creditors. This was never considered a dishonest statute; on the contrary, it is a statute in abatement of fraud, and has operated accordingly.

Your answer to my supposed case of irreconcilable priorities would be perfect if it could be maintained that the judgment creditor obtained a charge upon such a sum of stock only as would remain after positively deducting the amount of the prior mortgage; for instance, upon 3000*l.* stock out of 4000*l.*, the former mortgage being for 1000*l., and the stock at par. But I cannot conceive how the process you suggest could be justified upon any other principle. The judgment creditor, having obtained his charge and given notice, has a right to be satisfied every penny due upon it before a third incumbrancer can rightfully touch a penny of the fund charged.

After all, I suppose the House of Lords must settle the question between us; and the true moral to be drawn from the discussion is, that bills in Parliament relating to matters of great practical importance should be subjected to more judicious incubation.

A BARRISTER.

[When we have replied to our ingenious correspondent, if not before, our readers will probably think that this discussion has reached the point at which it should terminate, by ceasing to interest the lookers-on. We are not, any more than our correspondent, realists; and by an "equity of redemption" we understand the cluster of rights commonly understood by that expression—in short, the rights of ownership, subject to the charge; and we apply to an equity of redemption of stock the rule applied by Lord Cottenham in Whitworth v. Gaugain to an equity of redemption of land:—"A judgment has relation to the time when it is entered up. It will not affect any bona fide conveyance made for value before that time, for it only attaches upon what was then, or afterwards becomes, the property of the debtor. But the rule is not confined to what was his property at law. If it is charged in equity before the entry of the judgment, the judgment will not affect such charge. It can only attach upon the interest which remains in the debtor, viz. the legal estate subject to the charge." So far the cases were identical, and the only difference between them was this, that the one mortgagee neglected to secure himself by getting in the legal estate, while the other neglected to secure himself by giving notice; either of which omissions is sufficient to disentitle the party guilty of it to the assistance of a Court of equity against a subsequent purchaser for value without notice who is not equally remiss. In Whitworth v. Gaugain it was held that a judgment creditor getting in the legal estate was not a purchaser for value without notice, within the rule; in other words, that he was a purchaser subject to the mortgage, in the same manner as if he had had notice of it. In Watts v. Porter it was held that he was a purchaser for value without notice, within the rule. We repeat that the cases are in conflict; and if it is asked which is right, we think that a very simple test will give the answer. The statute says nothing about notice of the prior charge to the creditor; and so far from giving him a charge on condition of his giving notice to the trustee, it says expressly, that after notice of the charge to the trustee, the trustee shall be liable to the creditor; and in the meantime (i. e. after the charging order, and before notice to the trustee) no disposition by the debtor shall be valid as against the judgment creditor. The extent of the charge, therefore, is independent of notice to be given by the creditor. It is also, so far as the enactment, either in words or in spirit, is concerned, independent of notice of the prior charge to the creditor. Notice or no notice of the first charge is vital in a question of priority claimed by virtue of the legal estate or of the doctrine in Dearle v. Hall. If the debtor had given the judgment creditor an express charge on the stock, the creditor, previously knowing that the former charge existed, the second charge, though expressly extending to all the stock, would be postponed to the first charge. But how can this apply to a charge under the act? It will not be said that if the creditor had notice of the charge when he obtained his charging order he would be postponed, though not postponed if he obtained the order without notice, nothing being said or implied in the act concerning notice. The construction in Watts v. Porter must apply equally to the one case as to the other, unless we make a much more extensive and violent interpolation than that which was rejected by Lord Campbell. But we trust that no one is prepared to say that a judgment creditor, having notice of the charge when he gives the credit, or when he obtains judgment, or when he applies for the charging order, or when he gets it, or when he gives notice of it to the trustee, (one event is just as pertinent as any other), would be allowed priority over it.

We shall not accept the challenge to discuss the question of "honesty," which our correspondent, in fact, gives up, in abandoning the support supposed to be afforded to his construction by the sentence from which Lord Campbell strove to exclude it. No one is concerned with that discussion but Lord Campbell himself.

Our correspondent refers us to the reputed ownership clauses in the Bankrupt Act, and to the stat. 13 Eliz. By doing so he gives up his case. It may or may not be expedient to extend by statute the principle of those enactments to the case under consideration; in the meantime it is not within them, and the circumstance that it was found necessary expressly to enact the remedy they provide shews that it is not deducible independently from the principles of law and equity, and therefore is not to be extended to cases which the enactments do not reach. It would be as reasonable to hold, that because the Statute of Fraudulent Conveyances (27 Eliz. c. 4) avoids a voluntary settlement of land in favour of a subsequent purchaser for value, even with notice, such a settlement is to be set aside in favour of a judgment creditor under the notion of his being a purchaser for value. In the meantime, Whitworth v. Gauguin tells us the stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, makes the judgment creditor a purchaser of nothing more than such beneficial interests as the debtor had at the date of the judgment, not also of such interests in others as the debtor might possibly by some hocus pocus be enabled to cheat them of.

Our correspondent will excuse us for taking the advantage of the last word, since he has, if not ten legions, the Court of Queen's Bench at his back.—Ed.]

In order to give ample opportunity to the defendant of making this application, I propose that the summons should be served personally on him at least fourteen clear days before the day of trial, and that it should contain a distinct notice that any application he may make to change the place of trial will be entertained by the court without his personal attendance, or the attendance of any counsel, attorney, or agent on his behalf, provided that within seven days from the time of service he transmits to the county court of the district in which he lives an affidavit stating that he has a defence on the merits, and that either his material witnesses reside in the district to which he wishes the cause to be removed, or that some other good cause, to be specified, exists for the removal.

As soon as this affidavit is received by the clerk of the court in which the defendant dwells, it must be transmitted to the court out of which the summons issues; and notice must forthwith be given by the clerk of this last-named court to the plaintiff, in order to protect him from incurring the needless expense of bringing up his witnesses.

On the day originally fixed for trial, the judge will weigh the merits of the application, and contrast the defendant's affidavit with the affidavit of the plaintiff. He will then decide upon the point of venue, and either direct the proceedings to be transmitted to the court named by the defendant, or appoint the day on which the trial is to be heard in his own court. Notice of this appointment, like an ordinary notice of adjournment, will be sent to the defendant.

It will be observed that this plan does not vary the rights of the parties as now existing by law. The plaintiff, in the cases contemplated, is dominus litis. He may bring his action in whatever county he thinks fit. The defendant is allowed to change the venue on good grounds. The service of the process is personal.

With these rights I do not propose to interfere. All that I am anxious to effect is, to save the needless expense of a trial in a superior court.

The only objections urged against the plan which have been brought under my notice are—first, that it is complicated; and next, that to empower the judge to decide the question of venue on affidavits is impolitic.

These objections appear to me to have no weight. I deny that the plan is complicated; for what can be more simple than to require the mere transmission of an affidavit? The reasons why I propose that the affidavit should be sent through the foreign court are threefold:—

First, it will often be more convenient for the defendant to transmit it in this mode.

Secondly, any formal defect may be pointed out on the spot, and a remedy applied before it be too late.

Thirdly, the due transmission of the document will be secured, and all questions avoided as to whether or not it was either sent at all, or sent in proper time.

I conceive that there is no impolicy in allowing the judge to decide the question on affidavits.

In the superior courts important questions are daily decided in this manner.

In equity, affidavits furnish the usual mode of proof.

In the county courts themselves the analogous applications for leave to sue defendants out of their district are based on ex parte affidavits.

For such a purpose as this, affidavits are, in my opinion, preferable to vivâ voce testimony, as perjury on paper is far more dangerous to the deponent than oral perjury.

Mode of remunerating High Bailiff.—With respect to the mode of remunerating high bailiffs, the Report, after recommending "the discontinuance of the bailiff's mileage fee, both on serving and executing process, and on conveying defaulting parties to prison," proposes, first, that "the bailiff should be paid in proportion to the distance travelled by him in serving or executing process, or conveying committed parties, out of the fund which the remaining fees produce," (see ante, p. 288); and, secondly, that he should, in addition to this payment, receive a certain graduated salary, "which should only be one-fourth of the amount to which the clerk is entitled," (Id. 298).

The reasons on which these recommendations are based are thus stated, (Id. 297):—

"In the case of the high bailiff, the duties of his office are of so peculiar a description, and the efficient discharge of them so little under the immediate control of the judge, that we think a strong interest in the complete performance of his duties ought to exist. We think, therefore, that besides his salary he should be allowed such remuneration in respect of mileage and executions as, with reference to the circumstances of each district, the Lords Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury may from time to time direct."

Now, in proposing to abolish the mileage fee, I cordially concur with the other commissioners, for this fee is alike unjust in principle and vexatious in practice. But I cannot assent to the recommendation, that notwithstanding the abolition of the mileage fee, the high bailiffs should be remunerated partly by salaries and partly by payments varying in proportion to the distances travelled by them.

This seems to me to be a faulty system. It is an attempt to unite the two antagonistic plans of payment by the day and payment by the piece. It in fact combines the evils of both plans, and the advantages of neither. It imposes upon the bailiffs the necessity of keeping long and complicated accounts; and unless counter-checks are introduced of a costly and elaborate nature, it inevitably opens the door to much fraud.

The views taken by Mr. Finlason of the practical bearing and operation of these acts are remarkably shrewd and suggestive. Such men, and their editions of statutes, tend very greatly to improve the laws they expound, and powerfully assist the objects of the Legislature."—Law Magazine, Feb. 1855.

The attention of the Profession is invited to the advantages offered by this Office to Solicitors and their Clients, which will be found to be greater than in most other Life Offices.

ADVANTAGES TO THE ASSURED.

1. Four-fifths of the Profits are divided triennially amongst the Assured.

In some Offices the Assured may not be entitled to a Bonus until the expiration of ten years from the time of effecting the Policy, whilst in this Office three years is the utmost limit.

2. At the first division of Profits in May, 1853, a Reversionary Bonus, averaging 461. per cent., was declared on all Participating Policies. In some cases the Bonus exceeded 611. per cent. on the premiums paid.

On reference to the Prospectuses of some of the principal Offices, it will be found that the Bonus on their first division was much less, viz. 291. per cent.

3. The next division of Profits will be declared in May, 1856, when all Policies effected in 1855 will participate.

In most Offices Assurers do not participate in the Profits until after payment of from three to five annual premiums, but in this Office they may participate on payment of a single premium.

ADVANTAGES TO THE PROFESSION.

A Commission of 101. per cent. is allowed on the first year's premium, and 51. per cent. annually afterwards; and, as an additional advantage to persons introducing business, the Shareholders have by the Deed of Settlement given up half of their Profits for the benefit of such persons as extra Commission.

The extra Commission paid in 1853 to persons introducing business was as follows:—

Ordinary Commission paid.	Extra Commission paid.
£75 16 0	£14 12 11
188 9 3	135 7 3

THE JURIST.

LONDON, AUGUST 25, 1856.

Soon after the passing of the collection of acts which were the fruit of the first Real Property Commission, including the Dower Act, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 106, several questions were raised as to the condition of married women under the new law with reference to dower; and two of them, Mr. Hayes informs us*, were seriously agitated. The first was, whether a woman married on or before the 1st January, 1834, could extinguish her title to dower by a deed acknowledged according to the Fines and Recoveries Act, and, indeed, whether that act extended to dower in its inchoate state. That doubt was, as Mr. Hayes says, not deserving of serious refutation, whether it was founded on any supposed inadequacy of the word "estate" in the Fines and Recoveries Act, as extended by the glossary clause to any interest in lands, or on an imaginary repugnancy between the Fines and Recoveries Act and the Dower Act.

The other serious question was, whether the dower of a woman married on or before the 1st January, 1834, out of lands purchased by the husband after that day, might be excluded by a declaration (and, as a consequence, by alienation, &c.) under the Dower Act; and we are told that attempts were made, under the sanction of respectable advisers, to enforce the adoption of that interpretation in practice. We need not say that those attempts failed, or offer any comment on the plain words of the 14th section of the Dower Act—"And be it further enacted, that this act shall not extend to the dower of any widow who shall have been or shall be married on or before the 1st January, 1834; and shall not give to any will, deed, contract, engagement, or charge executed, entered into, or created before the said 1st January, 1834, the effect of defeating or prejudicing any right of dower."

After this, it was to be expected that some adventurous conveyancer would contend that the dower of a widow who had been married after the 1st January, 1834, was defeated by an expression of intention to exclude dower contained in an instrument executed before that day, by virtue of the 6th section of the Dower Act, which (passed in August, 1833) enacted, "that a widow shall not be entitled to dower out of any land of her husband when in the deed by which such land was conveyed to him, or by any deed executed by him, it shall be declared that his widow shall not be entitled to dower out of such land." The question was seriously argued before the Master of the Rolls in the case of Fry v. Noble, (1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 767), upon these facts:—In 1827 a freehold estate was conveyed, in favour of Mr. Fry, to the ordinary uses to exclude dower, and the limitations were introduced by the declaration that the estate was so limited "to the intent that the then present or any future wife of the said T. W. Fry might not be entitled to dower." After that conveyance the first wife of Mr. Fry died, and in 1838 he married the lady who, as his widow, now claimed dower out of the land comprised in the conveyance of 1827. The question, as we have said, was seriously argued, and it was as seriously and deliberately considered and disposed of by the very able judge who had to decide it. It was held that the plaintiff was entitled to her dower; and after taking time to consider the question, the Court allowed her her costs, observing, that it was not one of the cases in which, upon an undisputed question, the plaintiff comes merely for partition or having the award set out by metes and bounds, but it was, in truth, a disputed right to dower, resisted upon grounds which failed—grounds which, in the opinion of the Court, anybody would have advised the defendant to contest it upon, for it was a question of considerable nicety.

The decision of course proceeded upon a literal adherence to the words of the act, which entitles widows married after the 1st January, 1834, to dower out of equitable estates, and declares that it does "not give to any will, deed, &c. executed before the 1st January, 1834, the effect of defeating or prejudicing any right of dower," the sole reason offered for rejecting that literal construction being, that it gives to an act intended to place dower entirely within the husband's control the effect of subjecting an estate to dower which but for the act would have been exempt from it, and which the husband had declared he intended to exempt from it. But it was clearly impossible to control the positive provisions of the act—first, that a widow within the act should be entitled to dower out of equitable estates, if not excluded in the way pointed out by the act; and, secondly, that no instrument executed before the day named should be capable of so operating to exclude her; and when it is considered that the decision either way could neither shock nor gratify any moral instinct, the question under discussion being one which could not be decided upon any general notions of justice or morality, but related to the application of rules purely arbitrary in their origin and accidental in their operation, it is only surprising that so much trouble was taken to refute the arguments on the losing side.

We may here notice some other points on the application of the Dower Act. The 4th and 5th sections postpone the wife's dower to the title of any devisee or legatee claiming under any absolute or partial disposition or charge by the husband's will; and the 7th section enacts, that she "shall not be entitled to dower out of any land of which her husband shall die wholly or partially intestate, when by his will duly executed for the devise of freehold estate he shall declare his intention that she shall not be entitled to dower out of such land, or out of any of his land." The question upon this clause is, whether it contemplates exclusively land devisable by the testator, or extends to estates tail. Such a limitation of the expressed meaning would be purely conjectural; and it is probable that if the question were raised, it would be decided, after the example of Fry v. Noble, upon a literal construction of the act. The bar as to all the testator's lands, effected under the 9th section by a devise to the widow of an interest in any lands of which she would have been dowerable, clearly extends to the testator's estates tail.

The act, by extending dower to equitable interests, seems to entitle the widow to dower out of a money fund subject to a trust for investment in land, as in the analogous case of curtesy.

There is some ambiguity in the language of the 5th section, which enacts that all "debts, incumbrances, contracts, and engagements to which his [the husband's] land shall be subject or liable shall be valid and effectual as against the right of his widow to dower." The object of the enactment seems to be merely to give validity as against dower to such charges as attach on the land in the husband's lifetime, so as to postpone the widow's claim to the claims of judgment creditors, but not to subject dower to the claims of creditors by bond or simple contract, who have no right in respect of the land until after the husband's death, and with whose claims even then the land is not charged, but only the heir or devisee personally in respect of the land. (See Horn v. Horn, 2 Sim. & S. 448; Spackman v. Timbrell, 8 Sim. 260; Townsend v. Westcott, 2 Beav. 240; 4 Beav. 58; Richardson v. Horton, 7 Beav. 124). Before the statute, dower was subject only to such specific charges and incumbrances as actually attached on the land before the marriage. The provision in the 14th section, upon which Fry v. Noble was decided, has not the words "debts" and "incumbrances," though it has the words "contracts" and "engagements," which seem sufficient to include debts.

The 4th section negatives the widow's right to dower out of estates which shall have been absolutely disposed of by the husband; and the 6th, 7th, 8th, and 9th sections enable the husband to qualify, abridge, or extinguish his widow's title to dower by various means. But with respect to partial estates and interests, charges, &c. created by the husband, it is merely provided (sect. 5) that such partial estates and interests, charges, &c. shall be "valid and effectual" as against the widow's right to dower. The question remains, whether, after satisfaction of such partial estates and interests, charges, &c., if necessary, out of the widow's interest, she can claim to be indemnified out of her husband's assets, real and personal, as against the heir, next of kin, legatees, (not entitled to a charge on the real estate), and creditors, or any of them, and (in the case of a will made before 1834, and not subsequently republished) as against devisees. With respect to partial estates, and also charges which are not securities for debts personally owing by the husband, this question must be answered in the negative. The widow can have no claim upon any person for indemnity against such estates or charges. But charges of debts, for which the husband is personally liable, stand on a different footing; and though the act makes such charges effectual against dower, it does not seem to interfere with the ordinary rules which govern the application of assets to the payment of debts, but rather to place the widow in the same position with respect to such charges as a widow married before 1834 would stand in under the old law with respect to mortgages or other charges for securing her husband's debts in which she had expressly joined for the purpose of binding her dower. In either case the debts so secured must be paid in the first instance out of the assets of the husband—that is to say, his personal estate, and so much of his real estate as passed by his will or descended to his heir. After exhausting the assets, so much of the estate as has not already been applied in the character of assets will be applied by virtue of the charges. The clause under consideration clearly does not subject the widow's dower to debts as assets; and the stat. 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104, which expressly gives to simple contract creditors a remedy against the heir or devisee, without mentioning the widow, does not seem to subject dower to the payment of the husband's debts. If it should be held that dower is made assets by the enactments referred to, or either of them, it would then become a question in what order of priority it stands. Now, it is clear that under the old law a debt by judgment or on mortgage for years, incurred before marriage, (and therefore binding the widow), would be thrown on the bequeathed personalty in exoneration of the widow's dower; and there seems to be nothing in the new law to place the dower in a worse position. If this be so, as legatees are entitled to exoneration out of the descended realty, and, according to Tombs v. Rock, (2 Coll. 490), to contribution out of the devised realty, it follows that the dower is at least entitled to have priority over the heir. But the better conclusion seems to be, that where a widow is entitled to dower out of lands which are charged as a security for her husband's debt, she is entitled to have an unincumbered life interest in one-third of such lands, if the real and personal assets, after deducting the value of the dower, are sufficient for payment of the debts. This right of marshalling the charge would clearly be available against devisees under a will made before 1834, and not subsequently republished. Whether it would also be available against devisees of other land than that charged with dower under a will made after 1833 is more doubtful. The 4th section of the Dower Act merely deprives the widow of dower out of land absolutely devised away, but does not seem to affect the liability as assets of other lands absolutely devised; and even the 5th section, which declares that all partial estates and interests and charges created by the husband's will shall be valid and effectual as against the right of his widow to dower, seems merely to refer to dower out of the very land which is the subject of such estate, interest, or charge. Either this interpretation must be adopted, or the enactment must be read so as to deprive the widow of her right of marshalling mortgage debts, &c. on the personal estate, even as against mere pecuniary legatees.

Another question of great difficulty is, whether in the case of a mortgage of the lands subject to dower, and a deficiency of assets, the general creditors have a right of marshalling the mortgage debt on the mortgaged estate to the prejudice of the widow's dower. As the widow is not a volunteer, it should seem that they have no such right.

Our readers will have observed two editorial articles in THE JURIST, taking, within a short period, contrary views of the case of Watts v. Porter. It is right, and our practice, to allow both sides of a question to be represented in our columns, and it was only through inadvertence that the writer of the second article (who is one of "us") omitted to take the shape of "a correspondent." Accidents will happen in a large family of editors.

Review.

The Case of Luigi Buranelli Medico-legally considered.
By FORBES WINSLOW, M.D., D.C.L., late President of the Medical Society of London. 8vo., pp. 69*.
[Churchill.]

WHEN Brummell's valet was met carrying away a huge pile of clean but crumpled cravats, he explained, "These are our failures." The poor Beau did not choose his aims wisely, but he had the sense to know when he had missed them. If the State would take a lesson from him, and candidly label, not only the cravats which its last functionary adjusts, but the whole of its criminal and civil process in action, as "Our failures," we might in the course of time be delivered from the importunities of the class of "psychological" humanitarians to which Dr. Winslow has attached himself. If they who would shield a criminal from punishment on the ground of "irresistible impulse" could acquire the habit of regarding as a failure of the law every case in which it is called into action with a view to punish a criminal or to redress a wrong, they might see that no crime is ever committed or wrong done otherwise than under irresistible impulse, and that if the crime of an intelligent lunatic ought to go unpunished, the infliction of punishment cannot be justified in any case. The only kind of mental incapacity or insanity that our law admits to be an excuse for an act which would otherwise be a crime is incapacity to understand that the act is forbidden by law. Thus, on the trial of Bellingham for the murder of Mr. Percival, Lord Mansfield said, "The single question is, whether at the time this act was committed he possessed a sufficient degree of understanding to distinguish good from evil, right from wrong, and whether murder was a crime not only against the laws of God, but against the law of his country." This principle of the common law has been perfectly settled and understood from a very remote period, but it involves a distinction which, though just and of immense importance, would probably escape the perception of a mere law-maker; and accordingly it will be found that the framers of the French penal code have not taken it, for their statement of the excuse from insanity is thus expressed—"Il n'y a ni crime ni délit lorsque le prévenu était en état de démence au temps de l'action." (Art. 64). Now, this article is at once vague and inaccurate, and it has materially added in France to the difficulties which are incident to adjudication on the plea of insanity.

When in 1843 Dr. Winslow published his "Plea of Insanity in Criminal Cases," we founded on the following passage some hope that he would ultimately arrive at just conclusions on this important subject, and give to the stern and salutary but unpopular rule of law the sanction it would gain by the secession from the ranks of the psychological humanitarians of so respectable and able a champion. Dr. Winslow then said, "I am not prepared to give an unqualified assent to the dogma, that in every case of mental derangement, without any reference to its degree or character, ought the person to be screened from the penalty awarded by the laws for criminal offences. I am ready to admit that if insanity be clearly established to exist, a prima facie case is made out in favour of the prisoner; but that because a person may be proved to be strange and wayward in his character, to fancy himself a beggar when he may have the wealth of Croesus, or to be ill when he is in the buoyancy of health—to believe that such a person ought of necessity to be exonerated from all responsibility is a doctrine as unphilosophical and untenable as it is opposed to the safety and well-being of society." We regret to find that, after twelve years' consideration, Dr. Winslow has not only become reconciled to this "unphilosophical and untenable doctrine," but has brought himself to speak of those who rejected it in such terms as these:—

"The trial and execution of Buranelli establishes 'that we had somewhat miscalculated the amount of 'enlightened progress made of late in judicial psychology; for we not only find a judge distinguishing for his 'learning, natural sagacity, and eminent acquirements, 'disposed to repudiate the plea of insanity when based 'upon what able, experienced, and reflecting men conceive to be conclusive evidence, but we also see 'medical jurists of character and position stepping 'boldly forward to support by the weight of their 'testimony and the authority of their names one of 'the most monstrously iniquitous verdicts of modern 'times! . . . The execution of Buranelli will, we 'fear, be a foul stain and a 'damned spot' upon the 'humanity and intelligence of the nineteenth century."

Strong language—so strong that many who read it will fancy that they must have overlooked the blackest points in the case in question. We are constrained to say, that the blackest point in the case, in the eyes of Dr. Winslow, appears to have been, that, as he says, it has done "an incalculable amount of injury to the advancement of medico-legal testimony in cases of alleged lunacy," and has damped the hopes which in 1843 he expressed of the speedy advent of the time "when there would be instituted, for the investigation of cases in which it is important to establish the existence or non-existence of aberration of mind, a separate jurisdiction, presided over by persons whose attention has been specially directed to the study of mental aberration." It is unnecessary to disclaim the intention of imputing to Dr. Winslow the slightest tincture of those motives which may be supposed to actuate the herd of professional witnesses who strive, too often with success, to make themselves prominent in cases of this kind; but we regard him as a kind of Hildebrand, misled by zeal for his faith and ambition for his order.

This pamphlet is not what it professes to be—a full narrative of Buranelli's case. It does not represent the complete and fair effect of all the evidence; and it omits the observations made on the case by Mr. Justice Erle, remarkable equally for sense, temper, and courage. But even the imperfect report before us shews that the execution of Buranelli was necessary. The entire case in favour of the prisoner was this—that some time before the murder he had a morbid delusion as to the result of an operation for fistula which had been performed on him, fancying that the surgeon had destroyed his health, that he was suffering in an aggravated form results which were wholly imaginary, and that up to the time of the murder he was gloomy and desponding, and possessed by the notion, apparently unfounded, that he had been injured by his victim. But so far from it being shewn that he was under any delusion as to the nature of the crime which he committed, it appeared by his own letters, written in contemplation of the act, that he fully understood he was about to do that which would render him infamous—which was forbidden by the laws of God and man. "But he was insane," says Dr. Winslow; and this is all that he says to the point. We admit it. He had an insane delusion. Grant (which was not shewn even to be probable) that the delusion included his motives to the act—grant that all was true which he madly believed to be so—what character would the act then assume? Murder to revenge an injury. The delusion, then, will not help us to excuse him. We are asked further to believe that he acted under an insane and ungovernable impulse. This was not proved, nor even suggested or rendered probable by the most favourable medical testimony, but was gratuitously assumed, or at the best inferred, from the existence of morbid delusion. No ground for such inference—no connexion shewn between insane delusion and insane impulse. And yet we are told that to refuse to recognise, adopt, and act upon this assumption or inference is to trample upon "British medical psychology!" We need not consider whether that form of ungovernable impulse which is called homicidal monomania is sufficient to excuse the patient who yields to it from punishment, because that was not even pretended to exist in Buranelli. We have simply the case of a man believing, whether morbidly or not is immaterial, that he was injured, and with his eyes open, and fully understanding the nature and consequences of the act, yielding to the impulses suggested by that belief. This is the case of every criminal who suffers. No man was ever hanged (otherwise than by mistake) for any other cause than that he had obeyed an ungovernable impulse. In further explanation of this, if it needs explanation, we shall repeat some remarks which we made in 1848*, in opposition to Mr. Ludlow's censure of the Criminal-law Commissioners' proposal to retain the common-law test of criminal responsibility—capacity to understand that the act is forbidden by the law.

The author of the very able "Letters on the Criminal Code" said, (p. 4), "It is well stated by the first Criminal-law Commissioners, in their seventh report, (p. 17), that 'the object of the penal law is the prevention of injury through fear of suffering.' The determination of those cases in which the fear of suffering sought to be produced does or does not operate constitutes, therefore, the very keystone of the penal law."

If the efficacy of the penal law is the only thing to be considered in criticising it, the criterion suggested in the above extract is not to be deduced from the definition there cited. For aught that appears, the fear of suffering may be more effectually called into action for the prevention of crime, by inflicting punishment in certain cases where the fear could not have existed, than by confining the application of the law to those cases in which it may be supposed to have been present. Indeed, a penal code which would bear the proposed test must be so framed as to be incapable of administrative execution—its prisons and scaffolds would be mere phantasmagoria; for the fear of suffering mentioned in the commissioners' definition must of course be understood to be a fear sufficient for the purpose—a motive stronger than the desire to which it is placed in opposition—a fear, therefore, which cannot exist when the crime is committed. The fear mentioned in the definition is a fear which deters from crime; the fear contemplated by the author of the letters is a fear which, if it exists in the criminal, is vanquished by other motives, and the existence of which, therefore, is perfectly immaterial to the object of the penal law, which is solely to induce effective fear. To propose to punish only in cases where effective fear can be supposed to have existed is to propose that punishment should never be inflicted—a scheme seriously insisted on by the phrenologists, or at least a considerable section of them, who would make the operations of justice exclusively curative, converting the penal code into a collection of moral prescriptions; though it is to be observed, that they lay so much stress on the distastefulness of reformatory discipline as to induce a suspicion that in practice they would be apt to put the change on their patients, and, like some heads of schools and of families, make a punishment of physic.

Punishment, then, is threatened for the purpose of influencing those who can be influenced by the threat; it is inflicted in order to seal the threat—to give sanction to it by shewing that it is made in earnest; it is not inflicted with any view to the criminal, unless (as in the case of Charles I) he is imprisoned or put to death for the protection of society from his future acts; and in that aspect it is precaution, and not punishment. The penal code addresses itself to the future innocents of society, not to its offenders in embryo; it does not address itself to the latter, for it would be useless to do so; and when it deals with them, it is only as a means to an end with which they are not concerned. In discussing, therefore, the immediate policy of a penal code, we have not to consider the relation between the punishment and the criminal, but solely the effect which punishing him will have upon others; as Coke says more accurately in English than in Latin, "The principal end of punishment is, that others by his example may fear to offend; ut pena ad paucos, metus ad omnes perveniat;" where for "omnes" we should read "ceteros." The moral or religious propriety of the punishment is a totally different question.

With those who would prohibit all punishment we decline to argue. Of those who would not punish criminals acting under an insane delusion or an insane impulse we would ask, first, what is the difference between a morbid belief of circumstances which if true would not excuse the crime, and the reality of such circumstances; and, secondly, why should any greater favour be shewn to an insane impulse than to any other? Is that conclusion assumed because it is thought too obvious to require proof? We think that the contrary is much more obvious, though the investigation of the limits of responsibility is, when pursued into details, one of the most obscure and difficult in social ethics. Every impulse which prevails is an irresistible impulse in the same sense in which an insane impulse is so, and its consequences could, by any one who knew the character of the patient, be equally foreseen. The form of the question proposed to be put to a jury on the plea of insanity ("Was the prisoner so mad that he could not help doing it?") may just as reasonably be adapted to the case of a noted thief as to that of a monomaniac—"Was the prisoner such a thief that he could not help doing it?" A man, sane in the common acceptance of the word, receives a strong provocation, and feels an almost unconquerable desire to kill the offender. It is for a long time doubtful whether he will yield to the impulse; at length Minerva takes him aside; moral or prudential considerations prevail. If the criminal impulse had conquered, if it had been irresistible, (i. e. irresistible by the forces at command), all agree that he would have been punishable. How is this case distinguishable from that, for instance, of the monomaniac Catherine Olhaver, who conquered her insane homicidal impulse? The impulse was the same—equally involuntary in its origin—equally liable to opposition, and actually opposed with success, by the same motives; yet if Olhaver had yielded, the psychological humanitarians would have spared her, as the subject of an irresistible impulse.

Now, still bearing in mind that we are considering only the efficacy of the law, what would have happened if the same part of Olhaver's character had been different—if she had been cruel, without affection, without conscience—interested, but having no considerable interest at stake—and if she had lived under laws allowing full impunity to "instinctive" crimes? Is it not plain that the one restraint necessary and sufficient for the protection of her charge would have been withdrawn by that society which was bound to protect it? It is the peculiarity of these cases of moral insanity, especially when accompanied, as commonly happens, with delusion, that (notwithstanding some striking instances to the contrary, on which too much stress has been laid) the ordinary moral restraints seldom exist in any force, and therefore it is doubly important that the only other check, the fear of punishment, should not be removed. The murderer of Mr. Drummond may be said to have suffered under an insane impulse as well as a delusion, though the medical witnesses deposed only to the existence of the latter. He escaped, from the defective administration of the law, which clearly required his punishment for what he insanely believed would not, if true, have justified his act. Our own opinion is, that there is no specific distinction between sanity and insanity, any more than between a good watch and a bad one; but be that as it may, it is certain that the adoption of Dr. Winslow's rule would be followed by the most deplorable consequences. Of this we have had some experience since the plea of insanity grew into fashion and favour with juries; and society is deeply indebted to the judge, the jury, and the Home Office for the wisdom and firmness with which they acted in Burnelli's case. We remember to have seen depicted in the Charivari an interview between a pickpocket and his advocate. "Have you no defence?" "None whatever; there are several witnesses, and I have already been ten times convicted of picking pockets." "Oh, then make yourself easy—I shall plead monomania." And this would have been a sound plea on Dr. Winslow's principles. We punish the one unhappy individual who is afflicted with the uncontrollable impulse, in order to assist multitudes in restraining a similar impulse of less intensity. For one case in which an hallucination becomes too strong for any restraint there are a hundred where it can be kept in check by the fear of punishment, and by that only. Many lunatics have been prevented from inflicting desperate injuries on themselves by the fear of punishment, and by that only. On the other hand, the boast, "They can't punish us, we are mad," has been heard more than once within the walls of a lunatic asylum.

We trust that we have said enough to shew that the rationale of punishment allows of no exception in favour of offences caused by instinctive or moral insanity. Whether the punishment of offenders from such causes can be defended on moral grounds is a very different question. To punish a man for an offence which is the consequence of a diseased organisation, and which, as has been said, a timely dose of jalap might have prevented, does not harmonise with common notions; the sentiment of abhorrence, and the desire of vengeance, which usually reconcile us to the suffering of the offender, cannot exist here. Yet if we compare insanity with the more usual causes of crime we shall not easily find a distinction to the purpose. On the one hand, a Pinel may shew the origin of the disease, point out its future course, demonstrate that no palliatives, no threats, no persuasions can arrest its course or prevent its operation—that the patient is blameless of the cause, and therefore irresponsible for the consequences; but, on the other hand, a Shaftesbury can point out in our large towns whole districts over which a moral miasma perpetually hovers—where of every hundred children, ninety-nine, already in the gristle, must harden into the bone of felonhood—must acquire such depraved habits and instincts, not to say also convictions and delusions, as will irresistibly force them during their lives to wage incessant war with the laws. True, the causes of the depraved instincts are educational or moral—not organic or physical; but the effect is inevitable, and the sufferer is as innocent of the perversion of his will as the lunatic is of his ailment, and is to our sympathies as much an object of compassion.

It may be replied that we are not justified in insisting on the punishment actually inflicted in ordinary cases, because the necessity for actual punishment is not contemplated by the theory of the criminal law, but is merely a defect to which the law, like other human institutions, is liable in practice; in other words, that if the detection and punishment of offences were certain, there would be no offenders—at least, no same ones; but if offences prompted by insane and ungovernable impulses were punished, such punishment would be a consequence of the theory, and not a mere accidental defect in the working of the law. This is a plausible, and to some extent a sound, distinction, but it is not sufficient for the purpose. The actual infliction of punishment must be contemplated by a complete theory of penal law, because no theory constructed with a view to practice is complete unless it takes account of the imperfections incident to practice. Our argument, therefore, founded on the admitted propriety of punishment in some cases, remains untouched. But further: it is not true, that even independently of considerations of imperfect administration, any theory of law can contemplate the non-necessity of punishment under any circumstances. It may be true, that if the detection and punishment of every offender could be made to follow immediately and infallibly on the commission of the offence, there would be an end of a large, perhaps the largest, class of offences—those committed in the hope of impunity. But even under such a utopian system ample employment for the lictor would be furnished by those who offend in defiance of the law, under the influence of various ungoverned passions not yet exclusively appropriated to the insane. Such, at least, must be the case until a Perillus is found to invent, and a Draco to enact, some universal torture, more abhorrent to the instinct of every possible individual than the gratification of any conceivable sane impulse. In the meantime we must protect society provisionally. If it is justifiable, for the benefit of society, to punish offenders who would not exist but for the imperfection of its institutions, the same end justifies the punishment of offenders who would not be such but for the defect of their own organisation. The punishment of the insane is proper if it prevents more suffering than it inflicts.

If Dr. Winalow would understand that in the foregoing remarks we have been merely insisting on and giving the reasons for a rule of law which, though old, is not obsolete, and has been always approved of by the Bench and by every lawyer of eminence, he would, perhaps, think it worth while to suspend the use of mere declamation and strong language until he had discovered and exposed the fallacies which, if he is right, have misled so many acute and practical minds during so many ages. In the meantime he is not taking the course to recommend his plan of a medico-legal tribunal.

PUBLIC EXAMINATION.—MICH. TERM, 1855.

THE Council of Legal Education have approved of the following rules for the public examination of the students.

The attention of the students is requested to the following rules of the Inns of Court:—

“As an inducement to students to propose themselves for examination, studentships shall be founded of fifty guineas per annum each, to continue for a period of three years, and one such studentship shall be conferred on the most distinguished student at each public examination; and further, the examiners shall select and certify the names of three other students who shall have passed the next best examinations, and the Inns of Court to which such students belong may, if desired, dispense with any terms, not exceeding two, that may remain to be kept by such students previously to their being called to the Bar. Provided that the examiners shall not be obliged to confer or grant any studentship or certificate unless they shall be of opinion that the examination of the students they select has been such as entitles them thereto.”

RULES FOR THE PUBLIC EXAMINATION OF CANDIDATES FOR HONOURS, OR CERTIFICATES ENTITLING STUDENTS TO BE CALLED TO THE BAR.

An examination will be held in next Michaelmas Term, to which a student of any of the Inns of Court, who is desirous of becoming a candidate for a studentship or honours, or of obtaining a certificate of fitness for being called to the Bar, will be admissible.

Each student proposing to submit himself for examination will be required to enter his name at the treasurer's office of the Inn of Court to which he belongs on or before Tuesday, the 23rd day of October next; and he will further be required to state in writing whether his object in offering himself for examination is to compete for a studentship or other honourable distinction, or whether he is merely desirous of obtaining a certificate preliminary to a call to the Bar.

The examination will commence on Tuesday, the 30th day of October next, and will be continued on the Wednesday and Thursday following.

It will take place in the Benchers' Reading-room of Lincoln's-inn; and the doors will be closed ten minutes after the time appointed for the commencement of the examination.

The examination by printed questions will be conducted in the following order:—

Tuesday morning, the 30th October, at half-past nine, on Constitutional Law and Legal History; in the afternoon, at half-past one, on Equity.

Wednesday morning, the 31st October, at half-past nine, on Common Law; in the afternoon, at half-past one, on the Law of Real Property, &c.

Thursday morning, the 1st November, at half-past nine, on Jurisprudence and the Civil Law; in the afternoon, at half-past one, a paper will be given to the students including questions bearing upon all the foregoing subjects of examination.

The oral examination will be conducted in the same order, during the same hours, and on the same subjects, as those already marked out for the examination by printed questions, except that on Thursday afternoon there will be no oral examination.

The oral examination of each student will be conducted apart from the other students; and the character of that examination will vary, according as the student is a candidate for honours or a studentship, or desires simply to obtain a certificate.

The oral examination and printed questions will be founded on the books below mentioned, regard being had, however, to the particular object with a view to which the student presents himself for examination.

In determining the question, whether a student has passed the examination in such a manner as to entitle him to be called to the Bar, the examiners will principally have regard to the general knowledge of law and jurisprudence which he has displayed.

A student may present himself at any number of examinations, until he shall have obtained a certificate.

Any student who shall obtain a certificate may present himself a second time for examination as a candidate for the studentship, but only at one of the three examinations immediately succeeding that at which he shall have obtained such certificate; provided, that if any student so presenting himself shall not succeed in obtaining the studentship, his name shall not appear in the list.

Students who have kept more than eleven terms shall not be admitted to an examination for the studentship.

The READER ON CONSTITUTIONAL LAW and LEGAL HISTORY will expect the candidates for honours in the ensuing examination to have mastered the first, second, fifth, sixth, seventh, and thirteenth chapters of Mr. Hallam's Constitutional History; the chapter in Foster's Crown Law relating to Treason; the chapter in Mr. Stephen's edition of Blackstone on the same subject, and the chapters in the same work relating to the Houses of Parliament and the Law concerning the Press; the chapters in Rapin on the Reigns of James I and Charles I; May's History and the first volume of Clarendon's History of the Rebellion. He will expect them to be acquainted with the State Trials during the reigns of the Stuarts, of William III, and Queen Anne.

He will expect the candidates for a pass to answer any general question bearing on English History, and to be well acquainted with the first, eighth, and thirteenth chapters in Hallam's Constitutional History, and with the chapters in Rapin containing the History of Charles II, and with the Trials of College, Lord Russell, and Algernon Sydney.

The READER ON EQUITY proposes to examine in the following books and subjects:—

1. Smith's Manual of Equity Jurisprudence. Mitford on the Pleadings in the Court of Chancery—Introduction; c. 1, ss. 1, 2; c. 2, s. 2, part 1, (the first three pages); c. 2, s. 2, part 2, (the first two pages); c. 2, s. 2, part 3; c. 3. The Act for the Improvement of the Jurisdiction of Equity, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86.

2. The Cases and Notes contained in the first volume of White & Tudor's Leading Cases, particularly those relating to the subjects of Election and Conversion; the remainder of c. 2, s. 2, part 2, in Mitford's Pleadings in the Court of Chancery.

Candidates for certificates of fitness to be called to the Bar will be expected to be well acquainted with the books mentioned in the first of the above classes.

Candidates for the studentship or honours will be examined in the books mentioned in the two classes.

The READER on the LAW OF REAL PROPERTY proposes to examine in the following books and subjects:—

1. Williams—Real Property; Stephen—Commentaries, vol. 1; Sugden—Powers, vol. 1.

2. The Power of Alienation possessed by Tenants in Tail and Married Women.

3. The extent of the Testamentary Power, and the alterations effected by the 1 Vict. c. 26.

The attention of the Profession is Office to the advantages offered by this Office to Solicitors and their Clients, which will be found to be greater than in most other Life Offices.

ADVANTAGES TO THE ASSURED.

1. Four-fifths of the Profits are divided triennially amongst the Assured.

In some Offices the Assured may not be entitled to a Bonus until the expiration of ten years from the time of effecting the Policy, whilst in this Office three years is the utmost limit.

2. At the first division of Profits in May, 1853, a Reversionary Bonus, averaging 45s. per cent., was declared on all Participating Policies. In some cases the Bonus exceeded 61s. per cent. on the premiums paid.

On reference to the Prospectuses of some of the principal Offices, it will be found that the Bonus on their first division was much less, viz. 29s. per cent.

3. The next division of Profits will be declared in May, 1856, when all Policies effected in 1855 will participate.

In most Offices Assurers do not participate in the Profits until after payment of from three to five annual premiums, but in this Office they may participate on payment of a single premium.

ADVANTAGES TO THE PROFESSION.

A Commission of 10s. per cent. is allowed on the first year's premium, and 5s. per cent. annually afterwards; and, as an additional advantage to persons introducing business, the Shareholders have by the Deed of Settlement given up half of their Profits for the benefit of such persons as extra Commission.

The extra Commission paid in 1853 to persons introducing business was as follows:—

THE JURIST.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 1, 1855.

FROM the past course of law-making as to judgment charges we may learn with how little effective consideration the duty of mending the law is undertaken and discharged. A man will shape his mercantile speculations, build his house, even order his coat or his dinner, with the nicest and most painful regard to every remote consequence to himself that can be forecast; and he will bestow as much care on his neighbour's affairs when he undertakes them professionally, whether for reward or for love. What he then does, either for himself or for another, will bear to be tried even by the event, due allowance being made for his limited faculties and lights. But set a man to contrive and order a new thing for society at large, in which neither he nor his employer have the main or any noticeable direct interest, and his work, when the means of judging it are ready, will appear like the first attempts of childhood. We feel that Bentham missed the root of the matter in referring the inferiority of the work done for the public to the absence of direct personal interest. Without vilifying human nature, we may trace the effect to a more simple and universal cause—the difficulty of doing anything new, to which all men testify as much by their proneness to observe custom and precedent in their own affairs, as by their high rating of novelty and invention in others' works. What is most truly new and valuable in a man's own work is least esteemed by him, because done with ease by powers whose slow growth he has not noticed, and whose working is familiar. Thus Petrarch, writing frigid latin verses with labour and difficulty, prized them, while he thought little of the polish and refinement he gave to his native language, the matured fruit of that ever-active fastidiousness which in his youth displayed itself in tight boots and other personal affectations. So it is seen that the habits of thought which constitute the dramatic power seldom co-exist with the accomplishments of the novelist. Shakespeare borrowed his stories, and Molière did the same or did without one:—Fielding and Scott could not write plays*. The moral of all this is, that we must not expect any kind of work to be well done except by those who from their youth have been in the habit of doing it, always taking care to distinguish between doing and pretending—in other words, between the work done in private establishments and the shew made in public offices. If we go to a pleader for pleadings, to a conveyancer for deeds, we must go to a reformer for bills. But by this advice we are for the time rather put back than forwarded. There is no such trade or profession as that of a law reformer, though the name is assumed by political and other adventurers— aspirants even to the woollack—their practices being what Sir E. Herbert, C. J., once described that of the vintner to be, not an art, but a cheat. Amateurs, who so often, in following their own pursuits, qualify themselves to do the State yeoman's service, fail us here. The art of amending the law can no more be exercised in private than the forensic or the military arts. We must create the profession. The State must establish a department of law reform, making the service a provision for life, and an ample and honourable one; giving advancement within the office, but no passage from it to anything higher. The chief men in the office must be as independent of government and of parliamentary and popular influence and clamour as the Astronomer Royal. Above all, they must begin early. But let us return to our sheep. We intended to review the whole flock, and to shew, by a comprehensive sketch of the entire subject of real assets and judgment charges on land, how miserably feeble and inefficient the legislative and judicial attempts to solve the problem—"how to satisfy the creditor out of his debtor's lands"—have hitherto been; but we must defer that task to another opportunity, and make amends for the foregoing speculations by a practical exposition of the act of the last session, "for the better protection of purchasers against judgments, crown debts, cases of lis pendens, and life annuities or rent-charges," (18 & 19 Vict. c. 15), which is, on the whole, a beneficial, though by no means a comprehensive or well-drawn, measure.

The first three sections relate to judgments and decrees of the county palatine courts, as to which, before the passing of the act, the law stood thus:—By the 21st section of stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, all the remedies, authorities, and provisions of that act applicable to the superior courts of common law at Westminster and the judgments and proceedings therein, were extended and made applicable to the Court of Common Pleas of the county palatine of Lancaster and the Court of Pleas of the county palatine of Durham, within the limits of their respective jurisdictions; and the same effect was given to the judgments of these courts within their respective jurisdictions as was given by the act to judgments of the common-law courts at Westminster. But it was provided that no judgment of either of the palatine courts should by virtue of the act affect any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, as to purchasers, mortgagees, or creditors, unless and until it was registered with the proper officer of the palatine court, in the same manner as judgments of the courts at Westminster are required to be registered in the Common Pleas. The stat. 2 & 3 Vict. c. 11, s. 4, which required the registry of judgments to be renewed every five years, for the purpose of binding lands as against purchasers, mortgagees, and creditors, is not expressed in such terms as to include judgments of the palatine courts; and the 5th section of that act, which declared that "none of such judgments, decrees, &c. as aforesaid" should have any further or other operation, as against purchasers and mortgagees without notice, than a judgment duly docketed would have had before the stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, seems to be equally inapplicable to judgments of the palatine courts. The 2nd section of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 82, which was directed against doubts founded on the strange decisions as to the effect of notice under the Docket Acts, and declares that no unregistered judgment, &c. shall, by virtue of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, bind lands as against purchasers and mortgagees even with notice, is also confined in terms to judgments of the courts at Westminster. The consequence was, that a judgment of a palatine court, if duly registered there, bound the whole of the debtor's land within the jurisdiction, as against purchasers and mortgagees without notice, whether claiming by direct conveyance or by appointment; and it was doubtful whether notice of such judgments would not render the omission to register immaterial.

As the county palatine of Lancaster was erected by Edward III, and in the fiftieth year of his reign granted in Parliament to his son John Duke of Lancaster, with all royal prerogatives, writs, executions, &c., we presume that the writ of elegit, granted by the Statute of Westminster 2, (13 Edw. 1, c. 18), has always been available upon judgments of the Court of Common Pleas in that county; and, if so, the omission to register a judgment there, in accordance with the provisions of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 21, though it prevented the judgment from operating under that act as against purchasers, mortgagees, and creditors, did not affect its operation under the Statute of Westminster 2. Whether any remedy in the nature of an elegit could, before the stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, be had upon a judgment in the Court of Pleas of Durham, which is a county palatine by prescription, is more than our sources of reference at hand enable us to say.

The object of the first three sections of the new act is to place judgments of the palatine courts on the same footing in these respects with judgments of the courts at Westminster, and to extend the provisions in the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, and the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 11, as to rules, orders, and decrees for payment of money, and lis pendens, to the counties palatine. They enact, in substance—

1. That a judgment in a palatine court obtained before the act of 1 & 2 Vict., and not registered there, shall not affect lands, as against purchasers, mortgagees, and creditors, unless and until it is registered. (Sect. 1).

2. That the provisions of the 18th, 19th, and 20th sections of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, (giving to decrees, orders, and rules for the payment of money the same force as judgments, and providing for the registration of them), shall apply, mutatis mutandis, to the counties palatine and the courts of common law thereof respectively, and the Court of Chancery of Durham, within the limits of their respective jurisdictions. (Sect. 2).

3. That the provisions of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 11, ss. 3, 4, 5, and 7, and the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 82, s. 2, respecting the registration and re-registration of judgments, decrees, orders, and rules, and lis pendens, and the protection of purchasers, mortgagees, and creditors, shall extend, mutatis mutandis, to the counties palatine and the courts of common law thereof respectively, and the Court of Chancery of Durham, within the limits of their respective jurisdictions. (Sect. 3).

The provision of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 82, s. 2, that no judgment not registered should, by virtue of the act 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, affect lands as against purchasers with notice, left it open to question whether judgments not docketed nor registered might not affect lands under the Statute of Westminster 2, as against purchasers and mortgagees with notice, although judgments once registered, and not re-registered within five years, would not have that operation. This question, and also the question whether notice to a purchaser of a judgment once registered, but not within the last five years, would not bind him, (see 9 Jur., part 2, p. 131), have been set at rest by the 4th and 5th sections of the new act, which in effect declare that no judgment, &c. shall affect any lands, &c., as against purchasers, mortgagees, and creditors, unless duly registered or re-registered within the five years. Thus, after four legislative efforts of the most eminent lawyers of the day, this little object of regulating the relative claims of judgment creditors and purchasers upon some consistent plan (whether the wisest is quite another question) seems to have been attained, though in such a way as requires two or three hours' patient study of as many acts of Parliament to determine whether it has been attained or not, and how.

We do not charge the next (the 6th) section of the new act on the framers of the preceding acts. It merely overrules the untenable doctrine in Freer v. Hesse, (17 Jur., part 1, pp. 177, 702; see Id., part 2, p. 98), that a judgment becomes altogether void and lapsed, as against purchasers, &c., by a single omission to renew the registration within five years.

By sect. 7 of the new act the proviso in sect. 22 of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, that no judgments, &c. of an inferior court, removed into a superior court, shall bind lands as against purchasers, &c. until the writ of execution reaches the sheriff, is repealed; and such judgments, &c. so removed are placed on the same footing as original judgments of the superior courts, both as to their operation and as to the condition of registration and re-registration.

Sect. 10 of the new act places orders in bankruptcy for the payment of debts admitted to be due to the bankrupt's estate, and orders in bankruptcy for payment of costs, respectively having by sects. 123 and 249 of the Bankrupt-law Consolidation Act, 1849, the effect of a judgment, on the same footing as to registration and re-registration as judgments.

The next provision (sect. 11) is not so satisfactory. It relates to the question first brought into notice by the decision of Sir L. Shadwell, V. C., in Harris v. Davison, (15 Sim. 128), whether a judgment is not a charge upon every possible interest in land of every possible description, to this extent, that a purchaser paying off an annuitant, mortgagee, or other incumbrancer, and taking the legal estate from him, is without notice bound by every registered judgment against him, to the extent of his annuity, mortgage, or incumbrance, and that a purchaser paying off an equitable incumbrance is bound by every judgment against the incumbrancer of which he has notice, (see Young-husband v. Gisborne, 1 De G. & S. 209; Clare v. Wood, 4 Hare, 81; and Russell v. McCulloch, 1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 157)—a doubt at first very much discountenanced in practice, (see the Report of the Registration and Conveyancing Commission of 1860, p. 513), but which has been gaining ground, and, in the minds of some practitioners, was tending to consequences thus traced by an ingenious writer*:—"Take a case of not uncommon occurrence—An estate is charged, by settlement or will, with annuities to the widows of former owners, and with portions for their successive younger children, and is then incumbered in favour of a dozen different persons, and finally sold. What, under these circumstances, would be the position of the purchaser? He would have to search for judgments, decrees, &c., first against the person having the legal estate, (unless a bare trustee), and next in succession against the widows, the younger children, the several mortgagees and incumbrancers, and finally the mortgagor. The searches, however, would not end here: should judgments exist against the various individuals, a new task is imposed upon the unhappy purchaser, and he must then commence another series of searches against the different creditors who have obtained the several judgments. But further: should judgments have been entered up against the latter, the search must then be renewed against the judgment creditors, and so on from one set of judgment creditors to another, possibly running through the whole alphabet, until at last no judgment is found against any one having the remotest connexion collaterally with the title." Let no one accuse Mr. Boyle of whimsicality in this picture until he has shewn how to get rid of the doctrine of the Lords Justices in Freer v. Hesse, (17 Jur., part 1, p. 703; see Id., part 2, p. 286), that a title alleged to rest on the possession of the legal estate, without notice of a particular incumbrance on the equity, is not marketable to one who has notice of that incumbrance. As Mr. Boyle says, that decision has virtually annulled Lord St. Leonards' Act, 2 & 3 Vict. c. 11. The new act attacks only one family of these mosquitos, namely, the judgment and prerogative creditors of a mortgagee. By sect. 11, purchasers and mortgagees, by conveyance subsequent to the act, of any legal or equitable estate, interest, or disposing power in or over land, are protected against the judgment and Crown debts of mortgagees paid off before or at the time of such conveyance. This is a short step in the right direction. According to precedent, we cannot expect to have the evil fully remedied until three or four more acts have been passed for the purpose.

The last provision in the act is a very odd one. Introduced by a statement, that by reason of the repeal (with the usury laws) of the Annuity Act, 55 Geo. 3, c. 141, purchasers are deprived of the means of discovering annuities by search, it enacts that no annuity or rent-charge determinable on a life or lives granted after the passing of the act, otherwise than by marriage settlement or will*, shall affect lands, as to purchasers or mortgagees, unless and until a memorial of the name, &c. of the person whose estate is charged, and the date of the deed, bond, instrument, or assurance whereby the annuity is granted, and the annual amount, is registered at the Common Pleas, to be indexed there for search. It was very unusual to search for annuities, though the search, being in strictness a necessary precaution, was frequently advised. But now that the act has provided a registry of annuities, not, like the repealed registry, for the purpose of exposing usurers and spendthrifts, but expressly for the protection of purchasers, a solicitor can in no case with safety neglect to make the search, both in the new registry and in the old one. We foresee a host of questions on, and a long tail of amending acts to follow, this provision, but our space will only suffice for these brief inquiries:—Why, in the present state of practice as to the possession of title deeds, is a provision for protecting purchasers to be confined to incumbrances of a kind which do not necessarily imply possession of the deeds? Why of such incumbrances are life annuities alone to be selected? Why, rather, are incumbrances to be registered, sales and settlements not? Why, when judgments must be re-registered every five years, are annuities not placed on the same footing? And why does not this provision, with such a preamble as it has, and following such elaborate provisions as to notice of unregistered judgments, expressly preclude the question as to the effect of notice of an unregistered annuity, which will certainly be raised upon it?

* "Suggestions for a General Index of Title, by W. R. A. Boyle, Esq.," an original reproduction of Mr. Wilson's plan in masquerade, which we shall notice when the question of registration comes again into season.

* The exception of annuities created by settlement is contained in sect. 12; that of annuities created by will is in sect. 14. Such is the nice derangement of clauses in this act.

We think we have proved our assertion, that our law-makers are still very bungling apprentices.

FIRST REPORT OF THE COUNTY COURTS COMMISSION.

(Concluded from p. 332).

The majority of the commissioners, while they recommend that the chief clerks should be paid wholly by salaries, appear to consider that such a mode of payment would be dangerous with respect to the high bailiffs. "The duties of the high bailiffs are of so peculiar a description." This vague language appears to me to be really unmeaning. There is nothing peculiar in the duty of a bailiff. If the system proposed in the Report be expedient in the case of high bailiffs, it is equally applicable to officers of customs and excise, to policemen, to postmen, to railway porters, to medical officers of unions. All these officers have responsible duties to perform, with no more immediate supervision than high bailiffs. If a high bailiff neglects his duty, the judge must almost inevitably hear of it; for creditors, as a body, are little likely to let their interests be disregarded with impunity. Then, if the judge does hear of it, the penalty to which the bailiff is exposed is sufficiently severe. Under rule 41 it is provided, that "if the non-service of a summons has been caused by the neglect of the bailiff, the poundage for such summons shall be paid by the bailiff, and the successive summons shall be served by him without further fee." I refer to this rule as shewing that the commissioners are scarcely justified in asserting that the high bailiffs are "so little under the immediate control of the judge."

If it be not expedient to pay postmen for every mile they walk and every letter they deliver—and if policemen ought not to be remunerated in proportion to the length of their beat, and the number of offenders whom they apprehend—I am at a loss to discover how the system proposed in the Report can be regarded as sound. Some few years back that very system was tried with the medical officers of unions. They were appointed at a yearly unremunerative salary, but they were allowed to charge special fees for attending women in labour, and for other operations. Precisely the arguments put forward by the commissioners were urged in support of this mode of payment. It was tried—it failed; and now, throughout the country, it has been uniformly abandoned at the instance of the Poor-law Board, and the plan of paying medical officers by a remunerative salary, without fees, has been substituted in its place.

In recommending that the high bailiffs should be paid partly by salary and partly by payments proportioned to the distance they travel, the commissioners do not condescend to particulars, or explain in what mode they propose to calculate the remuneration for travelling; but I presume that one or other of the four following plans must be adopted:—

1. A certain sum per mile for the service of each process.
2. A certain sum per mile travelled in the performance of duty.
3. A certain sum per mile for the service of each process beyond two miles from the court.
4. A certain sum per mile for each effective journey beyond two miles from the court.

The first plan, if adopted, would operate most unfairly. In a district containing a scattered population, the service of almost every process might require a separate journey; but if the district contained two or three towns or populous villages, a single journey might suffice for the service of twenty summonses. For precisely the same duty one bailiff might be paid a shilling and another a sovereign.

Moreover, in the case last suggested, the interest of the bailiff would be directly opposed to his duty. His duty would be to serve the process as soon as it was entrusted to him; but his interest would be to keep the process by him until others requiring service in the same locality came to hand, so that he might be enabled, in popular phraseology, to kill several birds with one stone. In the meantime, the debtors would escape or make away with their property, and the result would be, that the creditors would be defrauded.

The second plan is at least equally objectionable; for how would it be possible to ascertain what number of miles had really been travelled in the performance of duty? No system of checks could be invented which would prevent fraudulent demands from being made, or detect them when made. The plan would be a positive premium on dishonesty.

The third plan is open to the same objection as the first; and the fourth is as impracticable as the second.

Both these last plans would also have a direct tendency to induce bailiffs to neglect their duty with respect to the service of process within two miles from the court; for as that duty would be unremunerative, it would, on the principles enunciated by the commissioners themselves, become a mere secondary consideration, whenever more lucrative employment was in hand.

Moreover, if either of these last two plans was adopted, the metropolitan high bailiffs would be utterly ruined.

If any further argument were required to shew the inexpediency of the plan proposed in the Report, it might be furnished by the conduct of the high bailiffs themselves.

The object in view is to give them "a strong interest in the complete performance of their duties;" for it is presumed that without such an interest the duties will not be efficiently performed. Now, if this doctrine is worth anything, it must apply to the underbailiffs, who actually do the work, at least as forcibly as to the high bailiffs, who superintend it. But what is the actual practice? I believe, on inquiry, it would turn out that underbailiffs are uniformly paid, not by piece work, but by salary. In my own courts this system prevails, and works well; and, as far as I can discover, the same system is in general operation throughout the country.

The plan, therefore, which I venture to submit, in opposition to that proposed in the Report, is, that the high bailiffs, like the chief clerks, should be paid exclusively by salaries; but as the high bailiffs are required in the discharge of their duties to pay considerable sums out of pocket, both for keeping possession of goods taken in execution and for carrying delinquents to gaol, I think that they ought to be reimbursed these expenses. I therefore propose that they should still be allowed the fee mentioned in the Report* for keeping possession of goods, and also such sums in respect of mileage, or expenses incurred in carrying delinquents to gaol, as the Lords of the Treasury may from time to time sanction with regard to each district. In fixing the amount of these payments, the object should be, not to remunerate the high bailiffs, but simply to protect them from loss.

"Vol. 1 may be had, price 1l. 11s. 6d. boards.

"A mass of matter, cases, arguments, and discussions, thrown together in a work of such bulk, is like a library containing as many different works as this contains cases. . . . presenting the authorities on each point in the ipsissima verba of judicial decisions, but connecting, mediating, approving, or condemning them in his own words, which will be deservedly considered of little less weight by the student than the dicta to which they relate. . . . Such is the variety of topics, subdivided into an almost infinite ramification of cases and points, into which the learned author is necessarily led. Few writers, we apprehend, could be found sufficiently persevering to pursue every topic in such a list with the same untiring vigour, till each in its turn was exhausted; few would have the learning, fewer still the resolution."—Law Magazine, No. 22.

"We must far surpass the limits of an article were we to attempt to discuss, with any sort of completeness, the vast variety of subjects which Mr. Spence's second volume contains—subjects treated by him with a fulness of detail indispensable in a book designed, not only as a guide, pointing out to the student the great principles upon which the law in its complexities of actual business depends, and tracing the mutual connexion of those extensive provinces of equity with whose details he is expected to become familiar, but also as a storehouse, from whose well-arranged repositories the practising lawyer may readily furnish himself with the armour needed for the conflicts of the Bar."—Law Review, No. 22.

"There remains a vast amount of valuable information, both theoretical and practical, upon topics not to be found in any of the recent treatises, which must be carried to the sole credit of Mr. Spence's own original and laborious investigations; and from this results the peculiar character of the book, that it is at once trite and recherché, containing all the stock information on subjects within its scope which may be found in the current text-books, and, superadded to these, the result of an experienced lawyer's researches in neglected paths, and resumés of, or criticisms (where criticism is called for) on, the most recent decisions, doctrines, and innovations of the Court of Chancery. . . . A more dense mass of living law, available alike for study, reference, and practice, has seldom been presented to the Profession."—Jurist, No. 668.

"The reader, however, will be surprised at the mass of information which it contains; all the principal branches of learning are explored. . . . There never was less book-making in any book than in this."—Law Magazine, N. S., No. 8.

"A work which promises to be one of the most learned and philosophical treatises on the largest branch of British jurisprudence which our language has produced."—Law Times.

The attention of the Profession is invited to the advantages offered by this Office to Solicitors and their Clients, which will be found to be greater than in most other Life Offices.

ADVANTAGES TO THE ASSURED.

1. Four-fifths of the Profits are divided triennially amongst the Assured.

In some Offices the Assured may not be entitled to a Bonus until the expiration of ten years from the time of effecting the Policy, whilst in this Office three years is the utmost limit.

2. At the first division of Profits in May, 1853, a Reversionary Bonus, averaging 451. per cent., was declared on all Participating Policies. In some cases the Bonus exceeded 611. per cent. on the premiums paid.

On reference to the Prospectuses of some of the principal Offices, it will be found that the Bonus on their first division was much less, viz. 291. per cent.

3. The next division of Profits will be declared in May, 1856, when all Policies effected in 1855 will participate.

In most Offices Assurers do not participate in the Profits until after payment of from three to five annual premiums, but in this Office they may participate on payment of a single premium.

ADVANTAGES TO THE PROFESSION.

A Commission of 101. per cent. is allowed on the first year's premium, and 51. per cent. annually afterwards; and, as an additional advantage to persons introducing business, the Shareholders have by the Deed of Settlement given up half of their Profits for the benefit of such persons as extra Commission.

The extra Commission paid in 1853 to persons introducing business was as follows:—

Ordinary Commission paid.	Extra Commission paid.
185 9 3	135 7 3

[In the "Contents," ante, p. 337, the case in the Exchequer Chamber should have been printed as reported by H. Macnamara and G. Francis, Barristers at Law.]

THE JURIST.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 8, 1855.

It has sometimes been supposed that there is something peculiar in the contract of suretyship which takes it out of the general rule prevailing in our law, that contracting parties must form their own judgment and exercise due caution for themselves before incurring legal obligations, and which assimilates it to contracts of assurance, where the party assuring is bound to disclose all he knows about the assured. Thus Lord Chancellor Truro in Owen v. Homan (15 Jur., part 1, p. 339; 20 L. J., Ch., 314) uses this language—"The cases which are reported have generally arisen out of transactions in which there has been personal communication between the creditor and surety; and the clear law deducible from these decisions is, that the creditor must make a full, fair, and honest communication of every circumstance calculated to influence the discretion of the surety in entering into the required obligation." His Lordship then compares the duty of the creditor in such a case to that of the assured in a policy of assurance, who, unasked, is bound to give the underwriter all the information in his power to enable him to estimate the character of the risk he is invited to undertake*. This doctrine, however, was not acquiesced in by the House of Lords, to which the case was subsequently carried. (17 Jur., part 1, p. 861). It was felt to be a dangerous principle to import into contracts of this nature, and that no one would be safe in taking a guarantie if it were to be subject to so many circumstances affecting the liability of the surety, ultra the express contract into which he had entered. Accordingly, in the case of Hamilton v. Watson, (12 CL. & Fin. 109), which was a contract of suretyship on a cash account, Lord Campbell, C. J., delivering his opinion, said, "The question is, what, upon entering into such a contract, ought to be disclosed? And I will venture to say, if your Lordships were to adopt the principle laid down and contended for by the appellant's counsel here, that you would entirely knock up those transactions in Scotland of giving security upon a cash account, because no bankers would rest satisfied that they had a security for the advance they made, if, as it is contended, it is essentially necessary that everything should be disclosed by the creditor that is material for the surety to know." Equally clear and decisive is the judgment of the Court of Exchequer in the case of The North British Assurance Company v. Lloyd, (1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 45; 24 L. J., Ex., 14), which may be said to establish the principle, that a creditor who takes a guarantie is not bound to disclose to the surety every fact within his own knowledge which may affect the surety or his willingness to enter into the contract, and that such mere non-communication of facts will not, in the absence of actual fraud, affect the validity of the guarantie. The facts of that case were briefly these:—Sir Thomas Brancker obtained from the plaintiffs (an assurance company) a loan of 10,000*l.* for a certain period, on the deposit of shares, he agreeing to give further security, or pay off a portion of the loan, in the event of the value of the shares becoming depreciated below a certain sum. At the period for repayment such depreciation had taken place, but the loan was renewed for a further period on the same terms, on the deposit of additional shares, and the acceptance of James Brancker, the brother of the principal, for 2000*l.* Before the expiration of the renewed period, James Brancker, the brother, applied to the plaintiffs to be released on obtaining the guarantie of the defendant and three other persons for 500*l.* each. The plaintiffs assented, and a guarantie was drawn up by their solicitor, not referring to the acceptance, but reciting the consideration for the guarantie to be the original loan, and the plaintiffs agreeing not to require any further security in the event of the depreciation of the shares, as provided for by the original agreement. The defendant had no notice of the transaction between the plaintiffs and James Brancker. In an action upon the guarantie, the defendant contended that he was not liable, because he had not been informed that his security was required as a substitution for the security of James Brancker—a circumstance which might have induced him to make inquiries; and, indeed, the defendant swore at the trial that if he had known this fact he would not have become responsible. It was further urged that the recital in the guarantie was incorrect, and did not disclose the real state of the facts and the true object of the principal, and that in effect a legal fraud had been practised upon the defendant. The jury found that the substitution of security was not a circumstance material to be disclosed; and the Court held, that even if it had been material, the mere non-disclosure of it would not affect the defendant's liability; that nothing short of actual fraud would be sufficient for that purpose; and that the concealment, to be available by the surety, must have been made with a fraudulent intent. In the course of the argument Parke, B., said, "I deny that there is any such rule established as that the creditor is bound to disclose every fact that might affect the surety. Nothing short of actual fraud will do. If it were otherwise no person could safely take a guarantie. . . . According to the position contended for, the sureties could never be charged without letting the fresh sureties know. A very able treatise by an American jurist shews that it is by usage of trade that everything in cases of assurance must be disclosed, and that it does not rest on the ground of fraud." And in delivering judgment Pollock, C. B., said, "It is not a correct proposition that the same rule prevails in case of guaranties as in assurances on either ships or lives, in which it is a settled rule, no doubt, that all the material circumstances known to the assured are to be disclosed, though there should be no fraud in the concealment. It is a peculiar doctrine applicable to contracts of assurance, in which in general the assured knows, and the underwriter does not know, the circumstances of the voyage, and of other matters. . . . All the cases have been decided over and over again to be on the same footing as actual fraud, and not constructive fraud. But that the mere relationship of creditor and surety requires in all cases a full disclosure of all material circumstances was distinctly denied by the House of Lords in the case of Hamilton v. Watson, (12 Cl. & Fin. 109). . . . The non-disclosure of the circumstance of the change of security, even if it had been material, would not have vitiated the guarantie, unless it had been fraudulently kept back."

The result, therefore, of recent decisions upon this subject is, that the contract of suretyship is brought within the general rule applicable to other contracts, namely, that although avoided by actual fraud, it is not affected by mere non-disclosure or concealment of facts within the knowledge of the other contracting parties, and that contracts of assurance form the only exception to this general rule, such exception being founded, by the usage of trade, upon the peculiar character of that class of contracts.

A CORRESPONDENT asks us whether, in writing our observations on the Dower Act, (ante, p. 337), we have sufficiently borne in mind the act of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113. We had the act before us, but abstained from referring to it, lest we should needlessly, as we thought, complicate the consideration of a subject already sufficiently intricate. The act is not expressed with much precision, but we think that the absence of any intention to alter the rights of doweresses is sufficiently clear. It enacts, that when any person shall, after 1854, die seised or entitled to any estate or interest in any lands or other hereditaments charged by way of mortgage, without having by will or other document expressed a different intention, "the heir or devisee to whom such lands or hereditaments shall descend or be devised shall not be entitled to have the mortgage debt discharged or satisfied out of the personal estate or any other real estate of such person, but the lands or hereditaments so charged shall, as between the different persons claiming through or under the deceased person, be primarily liable to the payment of all mortgage debts with which the same shall be charged, every part thereof, according to its value, bearing a proportionate part." But the rights of the mortgagees are not to be prejudiced; and the act is not to affect the rights of any person claiming under or by virtue of any will, deed, or document made prior to the year 1855.

This enactment is irrationally limited in its scope, and will be fertile in questions. The words "seised or entitled to any estate or interest in any lands or hereditaments" are sufficient to include leaseholds; but the mention of the heir or devisee only suggests a doubt whether they were contemplated; and if the principle of the act is just at all, (which may be doubted), it ought to have been extended to all kinds of specific charges on all kinds of property. Then it is not clear whether the saving extends to a will made before 1855 and confirmed or republished by a codicil in or after that year.

But to return to our correspondent's doubt. It is plain that the words "the lands or hereditaments so charged shall, as between the different persons," &c., must be taken with some qualification—in fact, must be cut down to agree with, and mean no more than, "the estate or interest" in such lands or hereditaments of or to which the deceased died "seised or entitled." For suppose the deceased, being seised in fee-simple in possession, had made a settlement—whether post-nuptial or not is immaterial—giving his wife a life interest, and afterwards procured her concurrence in a mortgage, and died: here the wife would be a person claiming under him, and no contrary intention would have been signified by any document, (for the prior settlement could no more signify such intention than a subsequent voluntary settlement or a devise of the equity of redemption would do so); yet no one will say that she is not to have her life estate exonerated by the debtor's assets. The act must therefore be read as applying only to the estate or interest belonging to the testator at the time of his death, and transmissible, by reason of his death, to some person or persons who will then claim through or under him, (through him by descent, if the descent is to be traced from his ancestor; under him by devise or by descent from him as the purchaser). Now, the widow's dower, though barrable by the husband if she was married after the 1st January, 1834, is an interest to which, until he bars it, he is not entitled, and to which, if he does not bar it, he cannot die entitled, and an interest which is not claimed "through or under" him in the sense in which those words are obviously used in the act.

The act in question is another illustration of the extreme folly of attempting to reform the law by nibbling.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—Can any of your readers explain how the novel phrase "cestui que trustent" has found its way into the reports? I always thought that the terms "cestui que vie," "cestui que use," and "cestui que trust" were analogous, and that the last word in each was a substantive. No one, I suppose, can doubt it in the case of the first two: what authority is there for making the third a verb? The old meaning of "trust" is certainly that of "use," and signifies, not the act of trusting or of using, but the practical result, i. e. the benefit*; so in the Statute of Uses we read of persons who "have a use or trust," and it enacts that "the estate, &c. be in him or them that have or shall have any such use, confidence, or trust, after such quality, &c. as they had before in or to the use, confidence, or trust that was in them." As, then, before the statute the beneficial owner was cestui que use, or, more fully, cestui que ad le use, (Terms of the Law, "Use"), so now, if the use remains unexecuted, he is called in like manner "cestui que trust." The plural form, therefore, where there is but one trust for the benefit of several, must be "cestuis que trust," or "ceux" or "celles que trust;" and perhaps some of your readers who are scholars in the old French can tell us which form of the pronoun is most correct.

I am, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

Hugo.

Lincoln's-inn, Sept. 1, 1855.

[There can be no doubt that the affectation of correctness which our correspondent alluded to is founded on a blunder. Mr. Hayes considers the phrase "cestui que use" to be short for "cestui à que use"—he to whose use the property is conveyed. (Intro. to Conv., vol. 1, p. 33, note). But though our old lawyers spoke broken French often enough, they never used que in the sense of whose. "Les usez" was a common term for the profits, and the full form of the phrase is that cited by our correspondent from the "Terms of the Law." Thus Rolle (Abr., "Uses al common ley") says, "Si un enfant que use ad fait un volunt," &c. For the plural Rabelais uses "ceulx;" but in our books little account was made of number or gender. Thus Brooke, (Ffelements al Uses, 29), putting the case of a feoffment to the use of a parish, says, "les parochians sont cestui que use hic;" and in the preceding page he talks of one "tenant pur son vie." "Trust" in "cestui que trust" is plainly used as a substantive; and our ancestors never blundered to the extent of mistaking a verb for a noun, or a noun for a verb, though they were, even in English, careless of number and gender. Thus the use of the neuter pronoun "its" was scarcely established in Shakespeare's time, who talks of the grass as "creesive in his faculty;" and is so careless even of number as to sing of

"those springs
"On chalice flowers that lica."]

CONSOLIDATION OF THE STATUTE LAW.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONERS.

To the Queen's most excellent Majesty in her High Court of Chancery.

WE, your Majesty's commissioners appointed by your Majesty's commission and supplemental commission, dated respectively the 23rd August and the 15th December, in the eighteenth year of your Majesty's reign, whose hands and seals are hereto set, do hereby humbly report to your Majesty, that, in obedience to your Majesty's commission, we met for the first time on the 13th November, 1854, and have since met from time to time, and have both deliberated respecting the best mode of effecting the objects indicated to us by your Majesty's said commission, and have proceeded to a certain extent in effecting the same.

The objects so indicated to us were, "the consolidating the statute laws of the realm, or such parts thereof as we might find capable of being usefully and conveniently consolidated; combining with that process, if we should think it advisable, the incorporation of any parts of the common or unwritten law, in such manner as should seem to us desirable; and also the devising and suggesting such rules, if any, as might in our judgment tend to insure simplicity or uniformity, or any other improvement, in the form and style of future statutes: and for the aforesaid purposes, or any of them, we were authorised and empowered by your Majesty from time to time to employ such learned and skilful persons as we might think proper."

A sum of money having been placed at our disposal by Parliament, the first question which it became necessary for us to consider was, what assistance we should obtain in the preparation of the consolidated bills which we might think it expedient to undertake; with reference to which question we had to consider whether it would be more advisable to propose the appointment of permanent sub-commissioners at a fixed salary, or to employ different persons from time to time, to be remunerated by fees as for ordinary professional drafts. On the whole it appeared to us most convenient to adopt the latter course, at least for the present, for the following reasons:—First, because we considered that accident and inclination often make different individuals specially apt to deal with particular subjects, and that this plan would probably enable us to obtain in each case the services of the men most familiar with the statutes to be consolidated. Secondly, we considered that it would probably enable us to obtain the services of persons of higher standing than those who would accept the post of sub-commissioners. Thirdly, we thought that it would relieve us from difficulty, and from the risk of doing injustice, with respect to the question of requiring the sub-commissioners to relinquish their profession; and even if it should be proposed ultimately to employ permanent sub-commissioners, we considered that this plan would enable us to become acquainted with the persons best fitted for our purpose. Sufficient uniformity of method in the work of the different persons employed might, we thought, be attained by the general supervision which we should exercise.

* A trust is a right to receive the profits of the land, and to dispose of the land in equity. (Bac. Ab., "Trust;" Sanders's Uses and Trusts, c. 3, s. 2).

We have accordingly obtained the assistance, on the footing above explained, of the several gentlemen whose names will be presently mentioned.

We propose first to state what works we have hitherto caused to be prepared, in accordance with the directions contained in your Majesty's commission. They are as follows:—

1. A Consolidation of the Statutes relating to the National Debt, by Mr. T. Chisholm Anstey. This bill was originally prepared by Mr. Anstey as a member of the Statute-law Board employed by the Lord Chancellor in 1853-54, but has been revised and completed by him for our use, and is now under consideration.
2. A Consolidation of the Statutes relating to Masters and Servants or Workmen, by Mr. J. Warrington Rogers, (now your Majesty's Solicitor-General for Van Diemen's Land). This bill also was originally prepared by Mr. Rogers as a member of the former board, but has been revised and completed by him for our use, and is now under consideration.
3. A Consolidation of the Statute Criminal Law, by Mr. J. J. Lonsdale, founded on the reports of your Majesty's late Commissioners of Criminal Law. Of this work the first bill, comprising the subject of treason and other offences against the State, has been submitted to us, and the residue is in course of preparation.
4. A Consolidation of the Stamp Laws, by Mr. Henry Jessel. The scheme for this bill has been settled and approved, and the bill is in course of preparation.
5. A Consolidation of the Statutes relating to Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes, by Mr. J. W. Rogers. This has been delivered to us, and is now under consideration.
6. A Consolidation of the Statutes relating to Prisons, by Mr. Anstey. This has been delivered to us, and is now under consideration.
7. A Consolidation of the Statutes relating to Landlord and Tenant generally, by Mr. A. Bisset. The scheme for this has been delivered, and is now under consideration.
8. A Consolidation of the Statutes relating to Ecclesiastical and Collegiate Leases, by Mr. George Wingrove Cooke. The scheme for this has been delivered, and is now under consideration.
9. We have also superintended, at the request of the Copyhold Commissioners, a bill for consolidating and amending their various acts, prepared for them by Mr. G. Wingrove Cooke.

For the purpose of insuring to a certain extent uniformity of style in the bills prepared under our direction, we have caused some instructions for draftsmen to be drawn up, a copy of which is subjoined to this Report in the Appendix.

We also subjoin in the Appendix the minutes of our various meetings, and a few papers relating to some subjects which have been discussed by us, or which we have caused to be prepared for our use.

While causing the above-mentioned bills to be prepared, we were not unaware of the existence of several difficult questions relating to the process of consolidation which it may be thought that we ought to have solved before any such works were commenced. It may be admitted, that in consequence of those questions not having been first solved, the bills produced must be in some respects imperfect; but, taking a practical view of the matter, we felt that if the task were not to be commenced until a comprehensive plan had been matured in all its details, there was a considerable risk that it would never be commenced at all; and we considered that by producing some bills, certainly useful in themselves, and an improvement upon the existing state of the law, without making their acceptance dependent upon the acceptance in all its details of any large scheme of change, we might gradually make the subject familiar and popular, and thus prepare the way for future measures on a more comprehensive scale. We thought that these considerations justified us in producing these bills, even at the risk of finding hereafter that they must themselves be remodelled; for it is not necessarily an objection to a proposed improvement to say that when completed it will only be made the foundation of a further improvement. If the intermediate step is of itself a useful one, and the more perfect work cannot be hoped for until after a long interval, we conceive that we are complying with the terms of our commission by producing these bills for present use.

Having thus stated our reasons for the course which we have pursued, we proceed to mention shortly the several difficulties which have presented themselves to us in the course of our attempts to perform the task committed to us by your Majesty—difficulties which, as we have already admitted, ought, on an abstract view of the subject, to have been solved before any part of the work was commenced.

The first great difficulty lies in the arrangement of the materials which it is our office to remodel. An entire body of law may be made the subject of a scientific analysis and arrangement; though even in that case there can be no absolute correctness; and objections, it is believed, have been made to most of the divisions of their subject adopted by jurists. But this question of arrangement, which is so difficult even with regard to an entire body of law, becomes still more difficult when we have only to deal with the statute law; that is, with a collection of alterations of and additions to the general body of the unwritten law, which are not only entirely without order at present, but may possibly in some cases never admit, if taken alone, of being reduced to any order—at least, not without the incorporation of some of the unwritten law; for a mere series of exceptions without the rules can hardly stand alone.

It is true that a general plan of the whole law may be first laid out, and the statute law then distributed into its proper places in that plan. But this, if strictly carried into effect, would lead, as we conceive, to a result very different from what is generally contemplated by the consolidation of the statute law; for we presume that the entire dislocation, section by section, of the whole contents of the statute-book, and their redistribution on an entirely new plan, is something more than was intended by the commission with which we have been honoured by your Majesty; and yet it is probable that a division of the statute law according to the analytical arrangements proposed by jurists would make such a process necessary: if, for instance, the first great divisions were into "rights" and "remedies," "wrongs" and "punishments," nearly every statute on the Parliament roll would have to be taken to pieces.

It is obvious, that, besides other objections to attempting this operation, it would be necessary to pass the whole of any re-arrangement of the contents of the statutes framed on this principle simultaneously—a consideration which must alone be sufficient to deter any one from undertaking such a task at present. Again: owing to the varying proportions in which the law on any given subjects consists of statutory and non-statutory law, it may very well happen that the most scientific classification of the whole law would not be that best suited to an arrangement which was only to include the statute law.

The Right Hon. Sir George Grey, Bart., one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, has appointed Alexander Pulling, Esq., Barrister at Law; Arthur John Wood, Esq., Barrister at Law; George Baugh Allen, Esq.; and William Durrant Cooper, Esq., to set out the wards and apportion the number of vestrymen, under an act passed in the last session of Parliament for the better local management of the metropolis.

STARKIE'S LAW OF EVIDENCE.—NEW EDITION.

APRACTICAL TREATISE OF THE LAW OF EVIDENCE. By THOMAS STARKIE, Esq. Fourth Edition, with very considerable alterations and additions; incorporating the Statutes and reported Cases to the time of publication. By G. M. DOWDEWELL and J. G. MALCOLM, Esqs., Barristers at Law. Just published, in 1 vol. royal 8vo., price 11. 16s. cloth.

"Fortunately for the Profession, the new edition has been intrusted to gentlemen, of whom one is well known, not only as a ripe and accomplished lawyer, (doctrinâ malidus), but as a judicious editor, knowing how to withhold as well as how to apply his hand. Amid the present plague of reports mere industry is not sufficient to qualify even a second-rate editor. . . . It is evident that the editors have not been blinded by their respect for the author, but have altered, corrected, and amended wherever they have seen occasion. Such a course could not be pursued safely upon a small stock of learning or of judgment; and in our opinion it has been pursued, not only with safety, but with manifest advantage to the book; so that the fourth edition of Starkie is to the existing law what the first edition was to the law in 1824. . . . We wish we had some means of identifying Mr. Malcolm's portions of the work. As it is, being hitherto unknown in authorship, he must be content with the praise of having borne a part where all was good."—Jurist.

"It is also the only work of which a new edition has been brought out at such a time as to render it possible that it should apply to practice, with any degree of consideration and accuracy, the modern changes in the law. . . . We think the editors will have gone far towards restoring the admirable work of Mr. Starkie to its original character of the best work on the law of evidence which has yet been produced."—Legal Observer.

DART'S VENDORS AND PURCHASERS.

A COMPENDIUM OF THE LAW AND PRACTICE OF VENDORS AND PURCHASERS OF REAL ESTATES; comprising the Authorities down to the Time of Publication. By J. HENRY DART, Esq., Barrister at Law. Second Edition. In 8vo., price 21s. boards.

"In the case of Ware v. Lord Egmont the Vice-Chancellor referred to this work in these terms:—'A learned text-writer on this subject, Mr. Dart, in a book of very great merit, his 'Vendors and Purchasers,' enters into a disquisition on this judgment,' &c."—18 Jurist, p. 372.

"In conclusion, we recommend this work to the practitioner as a complete book, and one that will warrant his confidence, and furnish able assistance in all matters relating to the sale and purchase of estates; and we think no better book can be read by students, for the purpose of giving them a condensed view of the subject, and enabling them to see the application of those principles and rules with which a general study of the law has furnished them."—Law Student's Magazine.

"Mr. Dart's labours have produced in this compendium a readable book for the use of beginners. He has paid particular attention to the attainment of a logical arrangement, and a clear and concise style. . . . Without sacrificing its character as an elementary treatise, Mr. Dart has also made an useful book of practice. . . . The work is well worthy of a place, not only in the general library, but in that selection of books which the working lawyer looks upon as his best tools; which come most readily to his hand, and which he gets to look upon as a part of himself."—Law Review, May 1, 1851.

"The work is short, readable, and very accurate. . . . With these quotations we will close our notice of a work which is obviously prepared with great care, and, well, we think, become a standard text-book."—Jurist, March 2, 1851.

"Its plan is well arranged, the cases are carefully collected, the law is clearly expounded, and in every part of the treatise there is a great deal of learning. . . . The style is singularly compact."—Law Times, March 8, 1851.

THE PARISH: its Obligations and Powers; its Officers and their Duties. With Illustrations of the Practical Working of this Institution in all Secular Affairs. By TOULMIN SMITH, of Lincoln's Inn, Esq., Barrister at Law.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"Every overseer, churchwarden, vestryman, or other active parishioner who would know what are his constitutional duties, what are his rights, what he can do, and what he ought to do, should take Mr. Toulmin Smith's volume as a text-book. . . . Mr. Smith does especial good service in setting forth how thoroughly the parish is a secular institution, in its first intention as in its whole structure; and how unjustifiable is every attempt to subject its free system of representative government to the despotism of its pulpit. We may call this the basis or foundation on which the whole book rests. Mr. Smith treats of the history of parishes; dignifies the vestry with historical research upon its constitution; discusses the legal and constitutional position of every parish officer in detail, from the churchwarden to the beadle, the sexton, and the vestry clerk; treats upon parochial committees and trustees; has a chapter upon the position of the parson; and enlarges upon all the powers of a parish, whether they concern its roads, its records, its health, the care of its poor, its fire-engines, or any other thing belonging to it. The law concerning rates and taxes (each rate and tax being discussed separately) is also explained; and many suggestions are thrown out, under these various heads of discussion, having in view the throwing of fresh life into parochial business. . . . We see no reason why every man who loves his parish should not give a hearty welcome to this useful book, and so secure it a wide audience."—Examiner.

"Mr. Toulmin Smith's great practical experience of the subject treated necessarily gives a peculiar value to this book; and besides the author's practical knowledge, his learning on the subject is of the soundest and most practical nature. . . . In the multitude of constitutional, legal, and practical matters of the very highest value, and of vital importance to the existence of England as a free and well-governed country, it is not easy to select any particular chapters or sections as specimens of the whole."—Jurist.

"Mr. Toulmin Smith has devoted a great portion of his life to the study of the old forms of liberty which our ancestors bequeathed us, especially in respect to parish affairs; and as a consequence of his labours, we have now an elaborate book on 'The Parish,' which will be found, we think, to contain all the information upon this voluminous question which the simple subject of this realm may need. As a lawyer, Mr. Toulmin Smith is able to go into those details about parish duties and parish rights which every free inhabitant of this country ought to know; and as the book is written for the instruction of the public in general, and not the legal class in particular, and as it is quite a novelty and desideratum, it will be received as a great boon and a considerable authority. The author deals with the obligations and powers of an English parish meeting, and the officers and duties of the parish; and he gives illustrations of the practical working of the parish institution in all secular affairs. And at the end of the book there is a copious index, which enables the reader at once to turn to the text for the solution of any difficulty in connexion with parish matters."—Empire.

"Mr. Toulmin Smith has highly distinguished himself as an uncompromising champion of ancient Anglo-Saxon institutions, amongst which the coroner's court holds a prominent place. His work entitled 'The Parish' is a remarkable protest against a centralising spirit, which is one of the characteristics of modern legislation. . . . His book displays considerable erudition, and is admirably written."—Lancet.

"This book is so written as to combine profound and accurate legal learning and professional and practical knowledge with a popular and untechnical exposition of the subject-matter. . . . Independently of the legal and practical value of this book as a trustworthy guide to parish officers in the performance of their duties, it has a constitutional and historical value of no ordinary kind."—Globe.

"This book is an interesting one, containing much practical information concerning parochial duties, with which it concerns every one to be conversant; and its utility will not be by any means confined to those who agree in the opinions of the writer."—Morning Post.

"The parish stands, or ought to stand, in the same relation with regard to the ratepayers as the kingdom does to its Parliament. . . . But the means of knowing his rights and duties have hitherto been denied to a man of ordinary education and means. The book now before our notice will be of great service in supplying this hiatus. Written in a condensed form and comprehensible style, it combines the accuracy of a law-book with the pleasant tone of an essay and the usefulness of a dictionary. . . . As a practical treatise of reference, we can sincerely recommend this book to our readers. . . . Let them place it upon their library tables, and they need never be at fault upon a point of law or practice as to what is required of them as parishioners, or be unable to perform their ordinary duty as such according to law and their own satisfaction."—Manchester Daily Times.

"No living man has contributed so much to the proper understanding and due appreciation of the ancient municipal institutions of England as the author of the volume before us. . . . The writer's erudite acquaintance with the subject in all its bearings renders him an eminently trustworthy authority. . . . His present work contains a mass of rare and serviceable information, written in a clear and untechnical manner, and which cannot fail to be of the highest interest and value to those seeking either to fulfil the important duties of parish action, or to understand how such duties may best be fulfilled. Indeed, the author is fairly entitled to say that so much practical illustration of parish action has never previously been published in any work on the subject."—Sheffield Free Press.

ADVANTAGES TO THE ASSURED.

1. Four-fifths of the Profits are divided triennially amongst the Assured.

In some Offices the Assured may not be entitled to a Bonus until the expiration of ten years from the time of effecting the Policy, whilst in this Office three years is the utmost limit.

2. At the first division of Profits in May, 1853, a Reversionary Bonus, averaging 45l. per cent., was declared on all Participating Policies. In some cases the Bonus exceeded 61l. per cent. on the premiums paid.

On reference to the Prospectuses of some of the principal Offices, it will be found that the Bonus on their first division was much less, viz. 29l. per cent.

3. The next division of Profits will be declared in May, 1856, when all Policies effected in 1855 will participate.

In most Offices Assureds do not participate in the Profits until after payment of from three to five annual premiums, but in this Office they may participate on payment of a single premium.

ADVANTAGES TO THE PROFESSION.

A Commission of 10l. per cent. is allowed on the first year's premium, and 5l. per cent. annually afterwards; and, as an additional advantage to persons introducing business, the Shareholders have by the Deed of Settlement given up half of their Profits for the benefit of such persons as extra Commission.

The extra Commission paid in 1853 to persons introducing business was as follows:—

Ordinary Commission paid.	Extra Commission paid.
£75 16 0	£54 12 11
188 9 3	135 7 3

THE JURIST.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We must refer our Shrewsbury correspondent, who denies that Watts v. Porter conflicts with Whitworth v. Gaugain, to what we have written on those cases in pp. 313, 322, and 331. We cannot hope to make our views clearer by any further exposition of them. We agree with all that our correspondent urges in favour of the judgment creditor, viz. that his notice gave him a priority over any prior conflicting claim not protected by notice. What we say, on the authority of Whitworth v. Gaugain and of common sense, is, that there was no such conflict in Watts v. Porter; but the judgment creditor's lien or charge was never intended to affect anything more than what was left in the debtor after satisfying the mortgagees.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 15, 1855.

THE act for "diminishing expense and delay in the administration of justice in certain cases" (18 & 19 Vict. c. 126) came into force on the 14th of last month, and we propose briefly to consider the most important of its provisions. The main object of the statute is to give justices in petty sessions a summary jurisdiction to try, by consent of the prisoner, charges of larceny where the value of the property stolen does not exceed 5s., and of attempts to commit larceny.

First, as to the jurisdiction. Magistrates in petty sessions are empowered, by consent of the prisoner, to adjudicate summarily upon charges of simple larceny, if the value of the whole of the property alleged to have been stolen does not in their judgment exceed 5s., and upon charges of attempts to commit larceny from the person, or simple larceny. If they find the offence proved, they may commit the offender to the common gaol or house of correction, to be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for any period not exceeding three calendar months; and if they find the offence not proved, they are to dismiss the charge, and deliver to the person charged a certificate of such dismissal. There are three cases, however, in which this summary jurisdiction is not to be exercised by the justices.

First, if the person charged do not consent thereto; and for the purpose of ascertaining whether he consents, one of the justices, after the examination of all the witnesses for the prosecution, and before calling on the party charged for any statement, is to state to him the substance of the charge, and to say to him, "Do you consent that the charge against you shall be tried by us, or do you desire that it shall be sent for trial by a jury at the sessions," [or "assizes," as the case may be]; and if he consent, the charge is to be reduced into writing, and read to him; and he is then to be asked whether he is guilty or not of such charge; and if he says that he is not guilty, he is to be asked whether he has any defence to make to such charge; and if he state that he has, his defence is to be heard.

Secondly, if it appear to the justices that the offence is one which, owing to a previous conviction, is punishable by law with transportation or penal servitude; and,

Thirdly, if they are of opinion that the charge is, from any other circumstances, fit to be made the subject of prosecution by indictment.

In any of these three cases they are to deal with the charge in all respects as if the act had not been passed. It is further provided, that if upon the hearing of the charge they shall be of opinion that there are circumstances in the case which render it inexpedient to inflict any punishment, they may dismiss the person charged without proceeding to a conviction. (Sects. 1, 2).

It will be seen that a distinction is made between charges involving the actual commission of a larceny and those which relate only to attempts to commit it: in the former case the offence must be simple larceny, and the value of all the articles stolen must not in the judgment of the justices exceed 5s.; but they may decide in a summary manner a charge of an attempt to commit not only simple larceny, but larceny from the person, and this whatever may be the value of the article attempted to be stolen.

By the 3rd section an enlarged jurisdiction is conferred upon magistrates in cases where the accused pleads guilty to the charge. Thus, if a person is charged with simple larceny, (the value of the property exceeding 5s.), or stealing from the person, or larceny as a clerk or servant, and the evidence on the part of the prosecution appears to the justices sufficient to put the accused on his trial, and they think that the case may be properly disposed of in a summary manner, they are to reduce the charge into writing and read it to the accused, and explain to him that he is not obliged to plead or answer before them at all, and that if he do not do so he will be committed for trial in the usual course, and then to ask him whether he is guilty or not; and if he says that he is guilty, they are to cause the plea of guilty to be entered on the proceedings, and to convict him, and to commit him to prison, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding six calendar months.

In all cases of summary proceeding under this act the accused is to be allowed to make his full defence, and to examine and cross-examine witnesses by counsel or attorney. (Sect. 4). The justices may remand the case to the next petty sessions, and in the meantime, if they think fit, admit the accused to bail. (Sects. 5, 6). The justices by whom any person is convicted under the act may order the restitution of property stolen, taken, or obtained by false pretences, in those cases in which restitution might have been awarded after trial upon indictment. (Sect. 8). They may also, upon the request of the parties, order the expenses of the prosecutor and his witnesses to be paid. (Sect. 14). The petty sessions, for the purposes of the act, are to be an open public court, and to be the petty sessions holden for a petty sessional division; and a written or printed notice of the days and hours for holding such petty sessions is to be affixed by the clerk to the justices of petty sessions upon the outside of some conspicuous part of the building where the same are held. (Sect. 10). The conviction, or duplicate of certificate of dismissal, with the written charge, the depositions of the witnesses, and the statement of the accused, are to be transmitted to the next court of general or quarter sessions*, to be kept among the records of the court; and a copy of the conviction or certificate, certified by the proper officer of the court, or proved to be a true copy, will be sufficient evidence of the conviction or dismissal. The conviction will have the same effect as a conviction upon indictment, but it is not to be attended with any forfeiture; it is not to be quashed for want of form; and no warrant of commitment thereon is to be held void for any defect, if it be alleged therein that the offender has been convicted, and if there be a valid conviction to sustain it. The stat. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, (Jervis's Act), relating to summary convictions and orders, is not to apply to any proceeding under the act; and the statute is not to extend to Scotland. (Sects. 7, 9, 13, 24). Forms of conviction and of the certificate of dismissal are given in the schedule. In stating the offence, where the jurisdiction of the justices depends upon the value of the article stolen, in their judgment not exceeding 5s., it will be advisable to allege that fact, because, although the offence of larceny does not depend upon the amount of the property stolen, provided that it be of some value, yet it is a part of the specific offence over which jurisdiction is given by the act; and it is a rule, that all facts essential to jurisdiction must appear upon the face of summary proceedings, unless the statement of them is expressly dispensed with by statute.

It will be observed that no appeal is given by the act, and therefore none will lie; but as the writ of certiorari is not taken away, the proceedings may be removed, and quashed for want of jurisdiction in the justices who have made the conviction. This course, however, will not probably be often adopted, as, if the conviction is quashed for want of jurisdiction, the party would not, in the eyes of the law, have been in jeopardy, and therefore might still be indicted for the offence.

THE OPERATION OF AN UNSEALED LEASE.

THE decision in Stratton v. Pettit, (1 Jur., N.S., part 1, p. 862), noticed ante, p. 305, has been somewhat misunderstood, and has not been approved of by all even of those who have not mistaken its real scope and effect. The words of the 3rd section of the stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, are, that "a lease required by law to be in writing, of any tenements or hereditaments, shall be void at law unless made by deed." The instrument in Stratton v. Pettit was an unsealed agreement in writing, signed by the plaintiff and defendant, and in the material part thus expressed:—"The said J. G. Stratton agrees to let, and the said G. Pettit agrees to take, all that house, No. 42, &c., now in the possession of the said G. Pettit, to hold unto the said G. Pettit, his executors, administrators, and assigns, from the 25th March last, for the term of five years; and the said J. G. Stratton also agrees to sell, and the said G. Pettit agrees to purchase, the fee-simple of and in the said premises, to be conveyed unto the said G. Pettit, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, at the end of the said five years; yielding and rendering by the said G. Pettit unto the said J. G. Stratton, as well for the rent or use of the said premises for five years as for the said purchase thereof, 70*l.* in and by seventy shares of 1*l.* each in the Birkbeck Life Assurance Company, the receipt and delivery unto the said J. G. Stratton of the said shares in full for the said rent and purchase the said J. G. Stratton hereby admits." There were further agreements respecting the title, &c., and an agreement by Pettit forthwith to do all acts necessary to transfer the shares. The action was brought for breach of the agreement to transfer the shares. The declaration alleged that the shares had been delivered to the plaintiff, but not legally transferred, and that the defendant had enjoyed the premises without interruption. The defendant, among other pleas, pleaded that the agreement purported to be a lease, and was not under seal, and was therefore void. This plea was held good. Jervis, C.J., in delivering judgment, said, "The question is, what was the intention of the parties when the instrument was made. Doubtless they intended to make an instrument which should have some operation; but did they intend to make a lease or an agreement? If the former, they have not done what they intended, because the lease is void by the statute. . . . It is admitted that before the statute the instrument would have been held to be a lease. It is void as a lease, and the defendant is therefore entitled to our judgment."

There were two points in the case: first, did the parties intend the agreement to operate as a lease; and if so, secondly, did the failure of that intention excuse the defendant from his undertaking to transfer the shares? The Court decided both against the plaintiff. It did not decide the more important point which was suggested by the circumstances, but did not arise in the case, viz. was the instrument operative as an agreement to lease? Could the defendant have sued the plaintiff for breach of his contract to let?

The decision on the first point is somewhat startling. It is conceivable that the Court might have decided as they did in connexion with the second point, on the ground that the instrument manifested an intention to make the existence of a valid lease a condition precedent to the legal transfer of the shares, and also the understanding of the parties that the instrument operated as a performance of that condition. But the language and the attendant circumstances are scarcely capable of that construction; and it was not relied on by the Court. The decision was founded expressly on the ground that the agreement would have operated as a lease under the old law—a ground which seems insufficient to support it. The old decisions proceeded on this—that the Court found in each case an intention positively and unconditionally expressed, that a tenancy should be created on certain terms, and expressed by an instrument sufficient in point of solemnity to create such a tenancy. No intention was expressed or implied that it should not so operate, but in some of the cases an intention was expressed to have a formal lease executed. (Baxter v. Brown, 2 W. Bl. 973; Poole v. Bentley, 12 East, 168, where an agreement containing a stipulation for granting a lease as soon as certain houses were built was held to operate as a present demise). The parties intended that a certain relation should forthwith be created between them: they also intended that that should be done by a future instrument; but the expression of the principal intention in an informal way, by writing, being sufficient to effect it, the Court disregarded the secondary intention as superfluous. In doing this, they did not frustrate any intention, or cause any inconvenience, except in some cases inconvenience from the want of a stamp—an inconvenience which for fiscal reasons they could not take into consideration. But where the intention to create a tenancy is expressed, as in Stratton v. Pettit, in terms which are just as consistent with an intention to make a present agreement and a future lease as with an intention at once to make a lease, and is expressed by an instrument incapable of operating as a lease, there seems to be no reason for refusing to recognise the instrument as an agreement only. (See Doe v. Powell, 8 Scott's N. R. 700). However this may be, the criterion which the Court professed to apply is clearly unsafe. It will never do to decide that an unsealed instrument was not intended to operate as an agreement, merely on the ground that before the late act it would have been held to be a lease. Such a rule of decision would deny operation to any stipulation on the intended lessee's part contained in such an agreement as this, if unsealed:—"F. agrees to let all that &c. to W. for a term of seven, fourteen, or twenty-one years, from Christmas next, at the option of the said W., at the yearly rent of £—, payable quarterly; the said W. to keep the premises in repair, and to &c. and also to pay all the expenses of preparing a lease for either of the terms above mentioned." This was the instrument in Warman v. Faithfull, (5 B. & Ad. 1042). Alderman v. Neate (4 M. & W. 704) is a still stronger case.

The principal case did not decide, that though the intended lessee's covenant could not be enforced, the intended lessor was free from obligation to grant an effectual lease; and we think that the Courts are not prepared to decide that these words "I agree to let," in an unsealed instrument, do not make a binding contract, merely because if they occurred in a deed they would make a demise. If the words "I agree to let" are held to include a binding agreement, can the words "I let" be held to be wholly inoperative? The old doctrine was, that the words "grant" and "lease" included not only a conveyance, but a warranty.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—I trust that your article of the 1st instant may have the effect of arousing the Profession to exert itself to procure the revision of the law relating to judgments, or rather to procure the abolition of the judgment lien; and as there are other impediments to the free transfer of land which are almost equally objectionable, it would not be amiss if the movement were to extend to them also.

The cry of the day is for cheap law in general, and cheap conveyancing in particular. How can the desired cheapness be had whilst purchasers are compelled to make some half dozen different searches for incumbrances which in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred do not exist? The solicitor may, at the same time, increase his labour and pare down his profits by carefully curtailing the length of his deeds, and by studying economy in other respects; but small must be his progress towards satisfying the popular demands so long as the law obliges him to waste his client's money in searching for judgments and cases of his pendens, searching for Crown debts, searching for annuities, searching for bankruptcies and insolvencies, and so on. Now, experience shews, as speculation would lead us to anticipate, that of the persons who are in a position to have land to deal with, not one in a hundred is either indebted on judgment, or a defendant in Chancery, or accountable to the Crown, or dishonest enough to conceal an annuity, or an insolvent or uncertificated bankrupt; yet, as every vendor may be the hundredth man, every purchaser who would be secure must go to the expense of the various searches above enumerated. The conclusion to be drawn is, that land in the hands of a purchaser ought to be entirely relieved from the claims of the judgment creditor, the Crown, the annuitant, and the assignee. It is possible that fraud and consequent hardship would occasionally be the result; but unsound is the policy which would buy off a contingent, rarely occurring, and individual hardship, at the cost of a certain, constantly recurring, and public inconvenience.

Besides, we must not omit to inquire whether the judgment creditor and the rest are in fairness entitled to the special protection which the law throws around them. Take them one by one. If the judgment creditor neglect to follow up his judgment, he surely can have no just grounds of complaint should the debtor avail himself of the opportunity thus afforded to part with his property. It will be said that the creditor may be ignorant of his debtor's property. This is true; but if the creditor were armed, as he ought to be, with the power of summoning the debtor from time to time for the purpose of examining him as to his property, the objection would be removed; and in any case, whether with or without such a power, as he originally trusted the debtor without security, he has no equitable title to a security which it is impossible for him to enjoy without detriment to the interests of third persons. The above reasoning applies, with little variation, to the case of assignees of bankrupts and insolvents. The creditors confide the estate to their management, and if, neglectful of their trust, they allow the bankrupt or insolvent to remain in possession of property, and to appear to the world as owner, it appears but fair that this ostensible ownership should, as a sort of counterpoise to the reputed ownership provisions of which they get the benefit, confer the rights of real ownership. The Crown has by far the worst case of all; for, as it has been well remarked, there is in these days of guarantie societies no excuse for the Crown fettering the transactions of its subjects with its sweeping liens; and even without the protection which these societies are capable of affording, it would, to use Mr. Preston's words, (3 Treat. on Abstracts, 310), "be far better, in a country like Great Britain, that the King, or now, in more accurate language, the public, should lose the debts of those who have been trusted, than that the industry of honest and bona fide purchasers should be sacrificed by the misfortunes or the dishonesty of Crown debtors."

Then with respect to annuitants. Life annuities (except those granted by will or settlement, which do not require registration) are of such infrequent occurrence, that it would really be better to abolish altogether the power of charging them on real property than that purchasers should be placed in a position that they must incur either expense in making a search or risk in omitting it. But it is not necessary to go to this length. There are few cases in which a conveyancer could not suggest some expedient by which notice of the annuity might be given to persons dealing with the property charged; and any annuitant neglecting such a precaution, or taking an annuity where the precaution is impossible, ought to do it at his own risk. It is with regard to parties to a lis pendens alone that I feel any difficulty, since, whilst they are prosecuting the proceedings with diligence, they cannot be accused of remissness. It might be a question whether, in these days of Chancery despatch, it would be worth while to break in upon a general scheme by an exception in their favour, and whether the Courts could not in most if not in all cases devise means by which the interests of suitors might be protected during the pendency of proceedings. At all events, if registration is in this case indispensable, the evil might be greatly diminished if weekly lists were made out under authority, to be supplied to solicitors on payment of an annual subscription. Of course, if this plan were adopted, it would be necessary to publish yearly or half-yearly a revised list, containing all the cases registered during the last five years.

I will not add to the length of my letter by offering an apology, but subscribe myself,

Your obedient servant,

Sept. 10, 1855.

A SOLICITOR.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONERS.

We do not, however, mean to imply that much may not be done in the way of introducing order and a more systematic arrangement where there is now an entire absence of both; but, while doing so, it appears to us that we shall be best serving the convenience of those who have to deal with the law by disregarding to a certain extent the principles of scientific classification, in favour of another consideration—that of the convenience of keeping together in one new statute the contents of existing groups of statutes. Still, even with this limitation, great difficulties of detail present themselves in many cases, which can at best only be solved in an imperfect manner. It has been thought that considerable assistance towards the solution of difficulties of this kind would be furnished by having a complete analytical arrangement, according to subjects, of all the statute law now in force; and such a work is now in course of preparation for our use by Mr. T. Chisholm Anstey, under the immediate superintendence of the Attorney-General.

Another important preliminary question is, what is the exact meaning of the term "consolidation?" In a simple case the meaning of the term, and the mode of executing the process, are obvious enough; but many difficulties present themselves in the course of an attempt to carry the process into effect on any important scale.

The most serious of the questions which arise with reference to this is, whether any and what amount of simplification and amendment of the law can properly be introduced by us in the bills which we prepare for presentation to Parliament, and whether we are authorised to attempt the rewriting, with the correction of admitted imperfections, of those acts which do not require consolidation, strictly so called. It is contended, on the one hand, that the business of the commission is different from that of a responsible minister who prepares a consolidating bill. That is always professedly a bill to consolidate and amend the law, and it is presented to Parliament for the purpose, primarily, in most instances, of removing defects which have been discovered, as well as for the purpose of making the law more accessible. The duty of the commission, on the contrary, is, it is said, to present the law as it finds it, only in a more accessible form; and if Parliament is satisfied that it confines itself to this province, the bills which are prepared under its superintendence will (or should) be accepted and passed by Parliament without discussion on the propriety of the law itself; whereas if the bills contain alterations of the existing law, Parliament cannot, without abdicating its functions and its duties, treat them otherwise than as substantive new bills.

On the other hand it may be urged, that however easy it may appear to lay down as a rule that no amendments of the law are to be introduced in the consolidated acts, yet such a rule, if strictly enforced, would deprive the process of consolidation of a great part of its value. One of the great practical inconveniences of our statute law (arising from its having been framed by different hands at different times, without any single superintending authority) is, that it contains a vast number of variations to which it cannot be supposed that any serious importance is or ever was attached, and which might easily and advantageously be reduced to a single rule; and thus, it is said, the denial to a draftsman of liberty to use his judgment and discretion, within moderate limits, will compel him to work under the discouraging conviction that he is required to take great pains to produce a result which, if he possesses the intelligence without which he could not properly execute his task at all, he must feel to be very unsatisfactory, and comparatively useless, and which, moreover, he must feel that he could with ease make much better. Although, it is said, the question of the extent to which the framers of consolidated statutes may safely be authorised to alter the substance of the existing statutes presents some difficulty if we attempt to treat it abstractedly, and to lay down general rules for observance, the difficulty of solving it in actual practice, in the course of working out any given consolidated act, will not be great to a person of discretion and judgment; and with regard to the objection, that it will be found impracticable to pass consolidated bills unless they can be accompanied with an assurance that they contain no alteration of the law, it is contended that it might be objected with more propriety to pure consolidations, that it is a waste of the time and powers of the Legislature to put the whole machinery of legislation in motion for the purpose of deliberately giving a new parliamentary sanction to laws which are admitted to be in an imperfect or unsatisfactory state, without taking the opportunity of introducing unobjectionable amendments.

"A mass of matter, cases, arguments, and discussions, thrown together in a work of such bulk, is like a library containing as many different works as this contains cases . . . presenting the authorities on each point in the ipseissima verba of judicial decisions, but connecting, modifying, approving, or condemning them in his own words, which will be deservedly considered of little less weight by the student than the dicta to which they relate. . . . Such is the variety of topics, subdivided into an almost infinite ramification of cases and points, into which the learned author is necessarily led. Few writers, we apprehend, could be found sufficiently persevering to pursue every topic in such a list with the same untiring vigour, till each in its turn was exhausted; few would have the learning, fewer still the resolution."—Law Magazine No. 22.

"We must far surpass the limits of an article were we to attempt to discuss, with any sort of completeness, the vast variety of subjects which Mr. Spence's second volume contains—subjects treated by him with a fulness of detail indispensable in a book designed, not only as a guide, pointing out to the student the great principles upon which the law in its complexities of actual business depends, and tracing the mutual connexion of those extensive provinces of equity with those details he is expected to become familiar, but also as a storehouse, from whose well-arranged repositories the practising lawyer may readily furnish himself with the armour needed for the conflicts of the Bar."—Law Review, No. 22.

"There remains a vast amount of valuable information, both theoretical and practical, upon topics not to be found in any of the recent treatises, which must be carried to the sole credit of Mr. Spence's own original and laborious investigations; and from this result the peculiar character of the book, that it is at once trite and recherché, containing all the stock information on subjects within its scope which may be found in the current text-books, and, superadded to these, the result of an experienced lawyer's researches in neglected paths, and resumes of, or criticisms (where criticism is called for) on the most recent decisions, doctrines, and innovations of the Court of Chancery. . . . A more dense mass of living law, available alike for study, reference, and practice, has seldom been presented to the Profession."—Jurist, No. 668.

"The reader, however, will be surprised at the mass of information which it contains; all the principal branches of learning are explored. . . . There never was less book-making in any book than in this."—Law Magazine, N. S., No. 8.

"A work which promises to be one of the most learned and philosophical treatises on the largest branch of British jurisprudence which our language has produced."—Law Times.

The attention of the Profession is invited to the advantages offered by this Office to Solicitors and their Clients, which will be found to be greater than in most other Life Offices.

ADVANTAGES TO THE ASSURED.

1. Four-fifths of the Profits are divided triennially amongst the Assured.

In some Offices the Assured may not be entitled to a Bonus until the expiration of ten years from the time of effecting the Policy, whilst in this Office three years is the utmost limit.

2. At the first division of Profits in May, 1855, a Reversionary Bonus, averaging 451. per cent., was declared on all Participating Policies. In some cases the Bonus exceeded 611. per cent. on the premiums paid.

On reference to the Prospectuses of some of the principal Offices, it will be found that the Bonus on their first division was much less, viz. 291. per cent.

3. The next division of Profits will be declared in May, 1856, when all Policies effected in 1855 will participate.

In most Offices Assurers do not participate in the Profits until after payment of from three to five annual premiums, but in this Office they may participate on payment of a single premium.

ADVANTAGES TO THE PROFESSION.

A Commission of 101. per cent. is allowed on the first year's premium, and 54. per cent. annually afterwards; and, as an additional advantage to persons introducing business, the Shareholders have by the Deed of Settlement given up half of their Profits for the benefit of such persons as extra Commission.

The extra Commission paid in 1855 to persons introducing business was as follows:—

Ordinary Commission paid.	Extra Commission paid.
£75 16 0	£54 12 11
188 9 3	135 7 3
63 6 6	45 13 0
41 12 2	24 19 0
139 8 1	107 30 0

THE JURIST.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 22, 1855.

AMONG the statutes published in our last number (p. 32) was one "to amend the law relating to bills of lading," (18 & 19 Vict. c. 111). It has been decided on several occasions, that although the property in goods which have been shipped passes by the indorsement of a bill of lading, yet the contract contained in the bill of lading does not thereby pass; that the indorsee or assignee, therefore, has none of the remedies which arise under the contract, and cannot sue for the non-delivery or mis-delivery of the goods, although in respect of his property in them he may maintain an action for their detention or conversion. (Thompson v. Doming, 14 M. & W. 403; Howard v. Shepherd, 9 C. B. 297; Grant v. Norway, 10 C. B. 685; see also Tindall v. Taylor, 1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 112; 24 L. J., Q. B., 16).

It has also been decided that the master of a ship signing a bill of lading for goods which have never been shipped cannot be considered as the agent of the owner in that behalf, so as to make the latter responsible to one who has made advances upon the faith of the bills so signed; (Grant v. Norway, supra; Hubbersty v. Ward, 8 Exch. 330); although the master himself is estopped, under such circumstances, from denying that he had the goods. (Thompson v. Doming, supra).

The new act has express reference to these two classes of decisions. It first recites, that "by the custom of merchants a bill of lading of goods being transferable by indorsement, the property in the goods may thereby pass to the indorsee, but nevertheless all rights in respect of the contract contained in the bill of lading continue in the original shipper or owner, and it is expedient that such rights should pass with the property;" and then enacts, that every consignee of goods named in a bill of lading, and every indorsee thereof, to whom the property passes by the consignment or indorsement, shall also have transferred to him all rights of suit, and be subject to the same liabilities in respect of such goods as if the contract contained in the bill of lading had been made with himself. This provision, however, is not to affect the right of stoppage in transitu, or of claiming freight against the original shipper or owner, or any liability of the consignee or indorsee, by reason of such consignment or indorsement. (Sects. 1, 2).

With regard to the other branch of the subject, the statute appears rather to confirm, with some modification, the doctrine already established, than to introduce any material alteration in the law. After reciting that "it frequently happens that the goods, in respect of which bills of lading purport to be signed, have not been laden on board, and it is proper that such bills of lading, in the hands of a bona fide holder for value, should not be questioned by the master or other person signing the same, on the ground of the goods not having been laden," it is enacted by the 3rd section that every bill of lading in the hands of a consignee or indorsee for valuable consideration, representing goods to have been shipped on board a vessel, shall be conclusive evidence of such shipment as against the master or other person signing the same, unless the holder of the bill of lading had actual notice, at the time of receiving it, that they had not been shipped. The person signing the bill of lading, however, may exonerate himself by shewing that the misrepresentation was caused without any default on his part, and wholly by the fraud of the shipper or holder, or some person under whom the holder claims.

In our notice of the Criminal Justice Act, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 126, in our last number, we inadvertently omitted an important section which is found in the statute, although it has little to do with its general object, and nothing with its title. We allude to the 22nd section, which, after reciting the expediency of amending the law as to witnesses in cases of wilful or malicious injuries to property, enacts, that in all cases where any justice or justices of the peace have or shall hereafter have power to order a sum of money to be forfeited and paid to the party aggrieved, as amends or compensation for any injury to property, real or personal, the right of such party to receive the money so ordered to be paid shall not be affected by his having been examined as a witness in proof of the offence.

The responsibility for alterations of the law introduced under such circumstances would of course rest with the minister by whom the bill is brought into Parliament. A case of this kind has already occurred with reference to the bill for consolidating and amending the Copyhold Commissioners' acts, which (as we have already mentioned) has been prepared by Mr. Wingrove Cooke for the Copyhold Commissioners, and by them referred to us for approval. We have approved of it, so far as it is a consolidation of the existing law, without expressing any opinion as to the propriety of the amendments introduced.

Another difficult question connected with the process of consolidation is, how far the exact words of the existing statutes are to be preserved? No one can doubt that mere useless repetitions are to be retrenched; but to effect the complete union, in concise and uniform language, of the enactments of different periods, much more than that is necessary; the whole matter must be completely recast. It has been objected to such a proceeding that it will disturb all the existing judicial decisions on the former statutes, and that therefore the exact words of the old acts should be reproduced—at least, in those cases where they have been the subject of any judicial interpretation. On the other hand, however, it must be remembered, that as soon as there has been a judicial decision on a statute, the law on the subject consists of the statute as expounded by the decision; and to reproduce the statute alone and unaltered may lead to what is not a true representation of the existing law. In this point of view it would seem that many of those enactments which have been made the subject of decisions may require to be altered in their language so as to incorporate the effect of such decisions. The difficulty felt seems to be, that if this is done all the cases in which the law has been previously settled by litigation will have to be settled again by the same process. This, however, by no means follows; for if the new enactment be properly drawn, the cases will be provided for by it without litigation. No doubt a certain amount of inconvenience and trouble must follow on every change in the statute law; but they must be submitted to if the benefits will more than counterbalance them. Besides, as the act will be a new one, passed under new circumstances, it would not follow, even if the exact words of the old acts were retained, that they would in all cases bear the meanings attached to them by past decisions; at any rate, it would not be so certain that the obligation of examining and testing the new statute could be dispensed with.

The foregoing considerations seem to lead to the conclusion that it is not expedient at present to deal at all with those old statutes, such as the Statute of Uses or the Statute of Frauds, which, taken in connexion with the great amount of judicial exposition of which they have become the nucleus, can hardly now be termed statute law at all. Statutes of this class might indeed be put in their proper places, unaltered, in an analytical arrangement of the whole contents of the statute-book, with some explanation to the effect that they are put there only in a declaratory way, and that their effect is to remain the same as if they had been left untouched. It appears to us, however, that such a course would not be attended with any practical utility; and so far from contributing to the completeness of any arrangement of the contents of the statute-book, it would render necessary explanations or exceptions of a nature at once awkward and elaborate, and would also prevent the possibility of introducing any uniformity of style in the modern consolidated statutes.

The chief object, as we conceive, of our labours is, in the numerous cases where there are many acts applicable to one subject, often inconsistent, often ambiguous, or an incomplete expression of the intention of the Legislature, and generally verbose, to reduce as far as possible each subject to one simple statute, so that a clear statement of the statute law may be found in one act, which, amongst other advantages, would be a great assistance to future legislation.

With respect to the improvement of current legislation, little beyond the preparation of the few general rules for draftsmen already mentioned has been hitherto attempted; but it has been explained by the Lord Chancellor that it was part of his plan, in recommending the issuing of the commission, that Mr. Belenden Ker, in addition to his duties as a member of the board, should assist the Great Seal in the House of Lords in drawing such law bills as should be required by the Lord Chancellor, and by generally examining and reporting to him as to all the law bills introduced in either House of Parliament. This duty has been performed by Mr. Ker during the present session, and he has prepared or assisted in the preparation of several bills under the Lord Chancellor's direction, and has also reported to the Lord Chancellor on a great number of the bills which have been brought into Parliament.

Perhaps nothing satisfactory towards the improvement of future legislation can be effected until either a board or some other persons are appointed whose duty it shall be either to prepare or revise and report upon all bills before they are brought into Parliament, and to watch them during their progress through the two Houses, either as officers of the Lord Chancellor or some other minister, or as officers of the two Houses of Parliament.

July 10, 1855.

The following are extracts from the Appendix to the Commissioners' Report:—

March 14, 1855.—The Attorney-General brought forward some objections to the mode of proceeding adopted by the board. He contended that the plan of taking at random isolated groups of statutes and consolidating them into single acts was not likely to produce valuable results, or to satisfy the expectations which the public had formed from the appointment of the commission.

Before the process of consolidation is commenced the whole body of the law ought to be reviewed and arranged analytically; the parts of it which consist of statutes should next be placed under their proper heads; and the process of consolidation should then be applied to those parts of the statute law which fall together under this arrangement. The whole operation would thus be performed with regularity and system, and should be laid before Parliament, not in detached portions, but as a complete work. He thought that if it was shewn that it was a mere consolidation, and that it was carefully executed on fixed principles, the bulk of the work would not be an obstacle to passing the whole through Parliament at once.

The Solicitor-General was also in favour of commencing with an analytical arrangement of the law; but he further contended that the process to be applied to the statute law ought not to be a rewriting of the old statutes in a condensed form, but a digest of the existing statutory provisions, without alteration of language, but with explanatory additions where they have been judicially interpreted. A digest of this kind would admit of the incorporation of the common law wherever advisable, which could not be effected by merely producing aggregations of old statutes in new language. He contended that this was the process directed by the royal commission, taken in connexion with the report of the commissioners of 1835, whose suggestions were made binding on the present board by the reference to them contained in the recitals prefixed to the commission.

Sir W. P. Wood also thought that it would be useful to have a general analytical arrangement of the subject to be dealt with, as otherwise difficulties would arise in deciding the exact parts of the existing statute law that ought to be taken into any isolated consolidation.

The Lord Chancellor explained, that by the mention of the common law in the commission he conceived nothing more was intended than that draftsmen should not be debarred by any rigid rule from introducing such portions of common law as should make a consolidated act a complete and intelligible enactment, instead of a collection of fragments; and with regard to the proposal of the Attorney-General, he observed, that after the proposed analysis of the statute law was made, it would still be necessary to begin the actual work of consolidation with some isolated group; and he thought there would be great practical difficulty in passing an entire consolidation of the statute law through Parliament at once. He admitted that some imperfections might result from attempting to consolidate in partial groups, which might be avoided by a preliminary classification of the whole subject; but difficulties of detail would occur under any system, and the most scientific arrangement was not always found the most practically convenient. On the whole, his Lordship thought it advisable to commence by attempting what we knew to be practicable. Well-drawn consolidated acts were admitted to be useful, and were generally regarded with favour; and if the board could produce some good bills of the same nature as "Peel's Acts," and other existing specimens of consolidation, he thought it would gain the confidence of the public, and perhaps be empowered hereafter to attempt something on a larger and more scientific scale.

After considerable discussion, in which Lord Lyndhurst, Lord Brougham, and others took part, it was finally arranged that an analytical arrangement of the contents of the statute-book, as a guide to the board in the choice of subjects for consolidation, should be prepared; but that meanwhile the consolidation of separate groups of statutes should be continued according to the plan already adopted by the board.

The Attorney-General, the Solicitor-General, Mr. Coulson, and Mr. Ker were named the sub-committee to superintend the preparation of an analysis of the statute laws; and it was agreed that Mr. Anstey should be employed in the work under their direction.

The Lord Advocate made some observations on the operation of the commission with reference to the statute law of Scotland. He observed that there was no great necessity for consolidation of the Scotch statutes; but what was principally required was a revision of the English statutes from which Scotland was excepted, with a view to the assimilation of the law of the two countries wherever practicable. This was a process which must be performed sooner or later, and the only question therefore was, whether it should precede the consolidation of the English law, so that the new consolidated acts might be made applicable to all Great Britain, or be postponed till afterwards.

May 23, 1855.—The Attorney-General urged the importance of laying down a complete and logical plan of the whole field to be operated upon before the work of consolidation was commenced. He contended that it was necessary for the satisfactory consolidation of any branch of the statute law that it should be executed with immediate reference to a methodical distribution of the whole contents of the statute-book, and that if any isolated consolidations of particular subjects were commenced without any general plan, they must all be imperfect and unsatisfactory. He therefore proposed that the analytical arrangement of the statutes should be first completed, and then a large body of draftsmen should be employed to recompose at once the body of law thus distributed into a complete and methodical digest. He thought that Parliament would be more ready to pass a work of this kind in its entirety than to take up bills which should only profess to consolidate particular subjects.

The Solicitor-General remarked on the importance of making every division of the digest proposed by the Attorney-General complete in itself, so as to present a statement of the entire law on the subject comprised in it.

The Lord Chancellor observed that that would be to codify the whole law—a work which was not within the scope of the present commission. With respect to the remarks of the Attorney-General, his Lordship observed that no arrangement of the contents of the statute-book, however logical, would present any complete body of law, as the statute law itself was only a collection of alterations of, or additions to, the unwritten law; and he therefore suggested that the Attorney-General's proposal, however just it might be if a codification of the whole law of the land were the object in view, was misapplied with reference to the statute law alone. But his Lordship agreed that it would be advantageous to have some preliminary arrangement of the whole contents of the statute-book, in order to settle what groups should be taken together for the purpose of consolidation, according to some uniform principle of classification, so far as any principle could be applied; though, owing to the fragmentary nature of the subject, there must be many cases in which the distribution could be little better than arbitrary.

With regard to the disposition of Parliament, his Lordship thought that it would be easier to begin by passing a few consolidated acts on subjects which are generally admitted to require consolidation, and on which there are no differences of opinion which would raise discussion, than to attempt to pass an entire digest at once, as proposed by the Attorney-General. The confidence of Parliament would thus be obtained, and measures of a more extensive character, if hereafter determined on, would be better received and more easily passed.

Proposals for a new Classification of the Statutes.

The present arrangement of acts in three series, styled "public general," "local and personal, (public)," and "private," appears both inconvenient and inaccurate.

It is submitted that all the acts of the session ought to be numbered in a single series, in the order in which they receive the royal assent. The following are the considerations which seem to justify this proposal.

1. The classification now existing is, as regards the subject-matter of the acts, almost entirely arbitrary. Many acts are included in the "public general" series which are extremely limited and local in their application; while many acts of far more public interest are included in the "local and personal" series. In fact, the division is not founded on the nature or subject of the acts at all, but on the parties by whom the bill is applied for, and the forms and rules of the House respecting their introduction. Taking the acts of 1853, we find an act to enable the Commissioners of Inland Revenue to sell the site of the Excise Office in Broad-street called "general," while an act respecting the Great Bedford Level is "local;" an act about the rights of common over Battersea-park "general," and an act relating to the improvement of the city of Westminster "local;" an act to empower the sheriff of Berwickshire to hold county courts at Dunse "general;" and an act regulating the civil court of record of Liverpool "local;" an act about Westminster-bridge "general," and acts about bridges at Worcester and Rochester "local," and so on. The rules which govern the classification of bills, with respect to fees, proof of preamble before select committees, &c., are well known; but it is submitted that although there can be no objection to retain this classification as to bills so long as they continue bills, if it is found just and convenient, it need not be, and should not be, carried on into the arrangement of the complete statutes.

2. The present classification creates and fosters an entirely unfounded notion that there is some difference as to authority and obligation between the different classes of acts. Now, the present classification is founded on no statutory authority; and though it must be admitted that it has been incidentally recognised in several recent statutes, it is, strictly speaking, unknown to the law. There is, or was, a known distinction, both as to construction and as to "judicial recognition," between public and private acts; but this distinction, if not entirely abrogated, has no reference to the classification now in question, but only to the consideration whether the acts are really public or private in respect of their subject-matter. There is an intelligible distinction between laws which may be supposed to have been originated by the Legislature itself, and with reference to public considerations alone, and laws granted on the petition of private parties for their individual advantage, (privilegia). In the latter case it is reasonable to construe the terms of enactment used by the Legislature, however absolutely expressed, not as the expression of its supreme will, but as the grant of the petition of the applicant, and contingent, therefore, on the truth and propriety of the applicant's representations, and thus admitting modifications not applicable to public acts. But, as has been shewn, the modern threefold division of acts cannot be reconciled with this distinction between public and private, many of the "public general" being decidedly private in their nature, while some of the "local and personal" are public.

3. Another inconvenient result to the public of the present classification is, that in editions of the statutes they get many "public general" statutes at full length which they do not want, while many of the "local and personal," which they are more likely to want, are omitted. It is true that this is a question of intelligent editorship; still editors think themselves to a great extent bound by the classification adopted by the Legislature. It is believed that far more useful editions of the statutes would be published if the editors had to exercise their unfettered discretion as to printing at length or not in one single series.

There would be no difference in principle, and perhaps not much in bulk, between editions under the present and under the proposed system: the principle now is, and still would be, to print public statutes at length, and of local and personal ones only the titles; but there would be this difference, that under the proposed arrangement the really public acts would be printed, and the really local and personal ones omitted, which is not now the case.

The same observations apply to the rules as to the number of copies of acts to be printed and circulated by the Queen's printers. With respect to these, it may be asked, what rule is to be adopted if the present one is superseded? But the difficulty will be only that which must exist in every case where a selection is to be made; and it cannot be doubted that a selection made by any person of ordinary intelligence would be more really useful than an arrangement which, with reference to the present question, is little better than arbitrary. To have such a selection made by a competent officer would only be to effect the object for which the present rules were recommended by the committees of 1796 and 1801—namely, to insure that the publicity given to acts should bear a due proportion to their importance.

4. The rules as to "judicial recognition," &c., under which the present division was instituted, no longer exist. The clauses which used to be added to local and personal acts, declaring that they should be considered to be public acts, or that copies of them printed by the Queen's printers should be evidence, have become superfluous since the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 113, s. 3, which enacts, that "all copies of private and local and personal acts of Parliament, not public acts, if purporting to be printed by the Queen's printers, shall be admitted as evidence thereof by all Courts, &c., without any proof being given that such copies were so printed;" and the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 21, s. 7, which enacts, that henceforth every act "shall be deemed and taken to be a public act, and shall be judicially taken notice of as such, unless the contrary be expressly provided and declared by such act*."

The Queen's printers' edition of the statutes (which has been very negligently superintended of late) continues to describe the "local and personal (public)" series as "acts declared public, and to be judicially noticed," and the "private" series as acts "of which copies may be given in evidence;" but this is entirely inaccurate, and inapplicable to the present state of things. The "local and personal (public)" acts do not now require, and seldom, if ever, contain any declaration that they are public, and shall be judicially noticed; and they even occasionally contain a declaration that they shall not be public—for instance, the 14 & 15 Vict. c. cxxviii, relating to the estates of Trinity College, Dublin; and though the "private" acts do generally contain a declaration that a Queen's printers' copy shall be evidence, that declaration is now quite superfluous, and should not be made the foundation of any classification.

The Queen has been pleased to appoint Paul Ivy Sterling, Esq., to be a Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Ceylon.

* These clauses seem to set the question as to judicial recognition on a reasonable and proper ground, for no one can seriously doubt that the judges have the means of ascertaining satisfactorily what acts have been passed. But there is still some uncertainty as to the effect of the latter enactment on the rules as to difference of construction between public and private acts; for though the terms of the enactment seem ample enough, yet Sir J. Wigram, V. C., in Dawson v. Pever, (5 Hare), said that the distinctions in construction between public and private acts depended "on the nature and substance of the case," and were not affected by any technical considerations, "such as having the clause that the act shall be deemed a public act." (See also Guthrie v. Fish, 3 B. & Cr., and The Trustees of the Birkenhead Docks v. The Birkenhead Dock Company, before the Lords Justices, November, 1853). A doubt also occurs whether the rules as to pleading private acts (if any) are affected.

STARKIE'S LAW OF EVIDENCE.—New Edition.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE OF THE LAW OF EVIDENCE. By THOMAS STARKIE, Esq. Fourth Edition, with very considerable alterations and additions; incorporating the Statutes and reported Cases to the time of publication. By G. M. DOWDESWELL and J. G. MALCOLM, Esqrs., Barristers at Law. Just published, in 1 vol. royal 8vo., price 1l. 16s. cloth.

"Fortunately for the Profession, the new edition has been intrusted to gentlemen, of whom one is well known, not only as a ripe and accomplished lawyer, (doctrinâ malidus), but as a judicious editor, knowing how to withhold as well as how to apply his hand. Amid the present plague of reports mere industry is not sufficient to qualify even a second-rate editor. . . . It is evident that the editors have not been blinded by their respect for the author, but have altered, corrected, and amended wherever they have seen occasion. Such a course could not be pursued safely upon a small stock of learning or of judgment; and in our opinion it has been pursued, not only with safety, but with manifest advantage to the book; so that the fourth edition of Starkie is to the existing law what the first edition was to the law in 1824. . . . We wish we had some means of identifying Mr. Malcolm's portions of the work. As it is, being hitherto unknown in authorship, he must be content with the praise of having borne a part where all was good."—Jurist.

"It is also the only work of which a new edition has been brought out at such a time as to render it possible that it should apply to practice, with any degree of consideration and accuracy, the modern changes in the law. . . . We think the editors will have gone far towards restoring the admirable work of Mr. Starkie to its original character of the best work on the law of evidence which has yet been produced."—Legal Observer.

The attention of the Profession is invited to the advantages offered by this Office to Solicitors and their Clients, which will be found to be greater than in most other Life Offices.

ADVANTAGES TO THE ASSURED.

1. Four-fifths of the Profits are divided triennially amongst the Assured.

In some Offices the Assured may not be entitled to a Bonus until the expiration of ten years from the time of effecting the Policy, whilst in this Office three years is the utmost limit.

2. At the first division of Profits in May, 1853, a Reversionary Bonus, averaging 45l. per cent., was declared on all Participating Policies. In some cases the Bonus exceeded 61l. per cent. on the premiums paid.

On reference to the Prospectuses of some of the principal Offices, it will be found that the Bonus on their first division was much less, viz. 29l. per cent.

3. The next division of Profits will be declared in May, 1856, when all Policies effected in 1855 will participate.

In most Offices Assurers do not participate in the Profits until after payment of from three to five annual premiums, but in this Office they may participate on payment of a single premium.

ADVANTAGES TO THE PROFESSION.

A Commission of 10l. per cent. is allowed on the first year's premium and 5l. per cent. annually afterwards; and, as an additional advantage to persons introducing business, the Shareholders have by the Deed of Settlement given up half of their Profits for the benefit of such persons as extra Commission.

The extra Commission paid in 1853 to persons introducing business was as follows:—

Ordinary Commission paid.	Extra Commission paid.
£75 16 0	£54 12 11
188 9 3	135 7 3
63 6 6	45 13 0
41 12 2	29 19 0

THE JURIST.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 29, 1855.

WE are still at some distance from that bold and comprehensive measure which is to combine law and equity, temporal and ecclesiastical, major and minor jurisdictions; but, in the meantime, it is gratifying to receive a few instalments on account of it. For some time past public as well as professional opinion has been in favour of promoting uniformity in legal procedure, and we have witnessed the beneficial results in statutes consolidating extensive branches of the law, and removing much that is anomalous and exceptional in our various systems of jurisprudence. The session of 1855, ingrossed with military affairs, has been unable to bestow much attention upon civil reforms—inter arma leges silent; but among the 129 statutes to which it has given birth there are still signs of this tendency towards uniformity in the laws. Thus, suits for defamation have been withdrawn from the ecclesiastical, and brought entirely within the temporal, jurisdiction of the realm, by the stat. 18 & 19 Vict. c. 41; the law as to the payment of costs in Crown suits is assimilated, by the stat. 18 & 19 Vict. c. 90, to that which prevails in suits between subject and subject; the practice in the county palatine of Lancaster is further assimilated, by the stat. 18 & 19 Vict. c. 45, to that of other counties with respect to the trial of issues from the superior courts at Westminster*; and provision is made, by the stat. 18 & 19 Vict. c. 48, towards abolishing the peculiar jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports.

We propose briefly to abstract the sections of the last-named statute, which is deserving of some attention. The object of the act is to abolish the jurisdiction of the Lord Warden over civil suits, and to sever from the Cinque Ports certain parishes, which at present constitute members or liberties thereof. The 1st section enacts, that from the 30th September, 1855, the authority of the Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports and Constable of Dover Castle, relating to the administration of justice in civil proceedings, at law or in equity, or the execution of judgments, writs, and process therein, shall cease, except as to writs of fieri facias received by him before that date. By the 2nd section, after the above-mentioned date, civil proceedings are to be directed, executed, and carried on in the Cinque Ports, the two ancient towns of Winchelsea and Rye, and their liberties, in the same manner as in other places in England, and the sheriff and other ministers of counties are to have the same powers within the Cinque Ports, &c. as in other parts of their counties. The 3rd section enacts, that on petition of the inhabitants of parishes within the Thanet division of Dover*, her Majesty may order such parishes, or one or more of them, to be deemed part of the county of Kent; and the county justices, who are then to have jurisdiction over them, are empowered by the next section to levy county rates upon them. By the 5th section certain acts of Parliament are to be repealed, so far as they relate to these parishes, after the order for their severance or a charter for their incorporation; and from that time neither the Court of Sessions for Dover, (except as to persons then committed or bailed for trial at such court, sect. 7), nor any of the justices thereof, are to exercise any jurisdiction over them. The 6th section continues the liability of such parishes for monies which have been borrowed on the security of rates raised within them. The 8th section provides for compensation in the case of offices abolished &c. By the 9th section, persons in the custody of the Lord Warden on the said 30th September, by virtue of any authority abolished by the act, are to be removed to the common gaol of the county in which they were arrested. The 10th section saves the rights of the Lord Warden and other officers of the Cinque Ports under any act relating to the adjustment of salvage, or of the Court of Admiralty of the Cinque Ports, or the rights of the Lord Warden, in respect of flotsam, jetsam, and lagan.

* See also the Common-law Procedure Act, 1852, sect. 103, by which records of the superior courts of common law are to be brought to trial, and entered and disposed of, in the counties palatine, in the same manner as in other counties.

THE SHIP REGISTRY LAWS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—Recent decisions upon the Ship Registry Acts warrant the calling the attention of the Profession to this branch of the law.

Some of these decisions appear strangely inconsistent with one another, and some of them seem to establish different rules from those which obtain when the subject dealt with is any other description of property.

Considering the important pecuniary interests which are involved in shipping property, and the vast amount of dealings with ships, it is surprising that some of the questions which have lately presented themselves for decision should not have been settled long ago.

The cases of Hughes v. Morris and M'Calmont v. Rankin will both be found in 2 De G., Mac., & G. 349, 403. Follett v. Delany was decided somewhat earlier; it will be found in 12 Jur., part 1, p. 549.

The decision in Hughes v. Morris seems to have surprised the Profession, for the opinion of the Court of Common Pleas was taken in Duncan v. Tindall, (13 C. B. 258).

In these cases the Courts have truly regarded the statute law as "ravelling all that can be gotten," and have indeed bestowed upon the words of the 34th and 37th sections of stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 89, a liberal interpretation, if we regard the extent to which they have been carried; but if we esteem the effectuating of the objects of the Legislature, the true test of the liberality of construction, we may doubt whether this praise is justly due to these decisions.

Intention can be gathered from silence as well as from expression. If ever silence is indicative of intention, we may conceive it to be so when the Legislature pass a statute in certain terms, which receive a settled construction in the courts of law, which construction is extended by another statute passed for that and no other purpose.

The Legislature, observing the merits and the mischiefs of the fruits of its twofold labour, supersedes them by another statute, in terms closely corresponding with its first essay, and (which would be marvellous but upon the supposition of design) omitting the very language which it had resorted to in its second effort. Certainly the inference of writers of repute was, that the construction of the later act was to be the same as that which its predecessor, to which its language bore so strong a resemblance, had received. (See Abb. Ship, 50, 5th ed., whose view is adopted in Coote Mort, 265, 3rd ed., and Maude & Pollock Ship, 13, note (i).)

In none of these cases have the judges intimated how the property in a ship may be effectually sold, or contracted to be "sold," without being at the same time "transferred," and all the rights and powers of an unpaid vendor over it absolutely and irreclaimably vested in the purchaser.

Such a state of the law was recognised in Follett v. Delany, and such we must consider to have been the aim of the Legislature in stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 89.

The decisions on this subject which appear to conflict the most remarkably are those of Sir R. T. Kindersley, V. C., in Coombs v. Mansfield, (1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 270), and of Sir J. Romilly, M. R., in Collinson v. Lister, (Id., p. 835). In the former case, there being a charge in favour of C., admitted to bind a ship in building till she was registered, the ship is registered, and transferred by a bill of sale, absolute in its terms, but in truth intended to be a mere security; this bill of sale and registered title become vested in L. and B., who when they took it knew of the charge in favour of C., yet the title of L. and B. was upheld, and no aid could be granted to

C., simply because L. and B. did, and C. did not, appear upon the register. In the latter case two directors of the York City and County Bank became, by force of a transfer of a mortgage from the manager of one of their branches, registered mortgagees of a ship for a sum fairly due to them, and considerably exceeding what they realised by sale of the ship. The Master of the Rolls decreed that the proceeds of this sale should be brought into court for the relief of the plaintiffs, who, though not appearing upon the register, were interested in a portion of the monies secured to the branch manager by the original mortgage.

In both instances the relief sought was against the proceeds of the sale of the ship.

One question, which it is singular should not have been earlier set at rest, occurred in the case of Parr v. Applebee, (Weekly Rep., No. 40, p. 645), and which came before the Court of Appeal on motion to vary the decree pronounced by the Vice-Chancellor of the Lancashire Chancery. This case differed from any other reported, in the circumstance that the contest was between two parties, both of whom appeared upon the register.

The plaintiffs were bankers, and had lent a customer 1600*l.* on security of a ship, which he mortgaged to Stanhouse, one of their firm, such mortgage being duly perfected by registration. The mortgagor afterwards applied to the plaintiffs for pecuniary accommodation, which they granted upon the footing of an agreement, (which, though in writing, did not recite the certificate of registry, and was therefore incapable of being recorded on the register), that the original "indenture of mortgage, and the property to which it related," should stand as a security, not only for the balance due upon it, but also for what might become due to the plaintiffs' firm by reason of the assistance the plaintiffs were affording the mortgagor. At the date of this agreement there was no other registered charge upon the vessel than that made to the plaintiff Stanhouse.

Six months after the date of this agreement, and with full knowledge of its existence, the defendants took a mortgage upon the ship, expressly "subject to the mortgage to the plaintiff Stanhouse." The defendants contending they were entitled to redeem the plaintiffs on payment of the small balance which still remained of the original mortgage debt only, and being in possession of the ship, she was sold, by arrangement of all parties; and on the cause coming before the Vice-Chancellor of Lancashire, he decreed that the plaintiffs were entitled to payment out of the proceeds of the ship of what was due to them upon the footing of the agreement, as well as the balance of the original mortgage debt.

The Lords Justices have, however, decided that the proceeds of the ship are not to be applied in payment of anything that may be due to the plaintiffs under the agreement, until after the defendants shall have been satisfied all that is due to them upon their mortgage.

The question thus disposed of for the first time was as to the terms upon which the first mortgage of a ship may be redeemed.

Their Lordships refrained from entering at large upon the case, and the reasons for their conclusion, lest they might prejudice the case of Armstrong v. Armstrong, (25 Law T. 251), which it was anticipated would be brought before the Court of Appeal. Enough, however, fell from the Lords Justices to lead to the inference that they thought the vice of the plaintiffs' case lay in the second agreement, professing to charge the ship itself, and to secure monies due to the whole of the plaintiffs, and not merely to Stanhouse, the original mortgagee.

It might have been apprehended that the agreement in favour of the plaintiffs was either good against the defendants and all the world, or else void in toto, for the Ship Registry Act seemed to render informal and incomplete instruments utterly worthless, the language of the 37th section, if taken literally, being, that no bill of sale or other instrument shall be valid, for a specified or any other purpose, until produced and registered at the Custom-house. The Lords Justices appear, however, to have given effect to the agreement as against the mortgagor himself.

Unless the agreement was within the terms of the 37th section, (and if such is to be their effect, they ought to invalidate every deed of every description which has been executed during the time that section has been in operation, and has not been registered at the Custom-house), it is difficult to conceive what point of the policy of the Ship Registry Acts would be defeated, or which of the terms of the stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 89, would be infringed, by giving it effect. What has been the policy of the Ship Registry Acts? Two points have been mentioned by the Courts as the objects of the acts—one is, the preservation of a history of the ownership of the vessel from the delivery of the bill of sale; the other, the prevention of any but a British subject being an owner of a British ship, and enjoying the privileges accorded to such ships. By what possibility could the agreement contested in Parr v. Applebee interfere with either of these objects? Clearly it could not with the first, since it appears from the statement of it that Stanhouse alone was to hold and realise the ship; nor could it with the other, as (independently of the view suggested below) the acts themselves provide the remedy, for as soon as an unqualified person becomes owner of a British ship, she, from that very circumstance, loses her privileges as such. (Compare the 4th and 12th sections of the stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 89).

There is an expression at the close of the 45th section of this statute which may seem to militate against the right contended for by the plaintiffs in this case, to increase or alter the amount or nature of the debt due to Stanhouse on the original mortgage. A more careful scrutiny of the other portions of the statute removes the possibility of this being the true effect of that expression; but, without dilating upon that, I may be allowed to suggest that this very section would shew, that if a person, unqualified to be an owner of a British ship, were to become mortgagee of one, she would not thereby lose her privileges. The 12th section directs who may be owners, (and though a mortgagee may in some sense be said to be an owner "indirectly," yet that does not appear to be the sense in which the term "owner" is here employed); and this (the 45th) says qualified registered owners shall not be deemed, by reason of having made a transfer by way of security only, to have ceased to be the owners.

How are the notions of the validity of a bottomry bond to a Swede, a Dane, or a Spaniard, and the invalidity of a security upon a British ship in favour of an alien, consistent?

It is observable that under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, a person cannot be registered as owner by transfer until he makes a declaration of his qualification to hold British ships, and that no such declaration is required from a mortgagee registering his security, although a transferee by testament or act of law of a mortgagee must make one.

The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, appears to hold out better prospects to equity lawyers than the former registry acts afforded. It seems to put the mode of dealing with ships upon an intelligible and practicable footing. It recognises but two modes of transferring property in ships by acts inter vivos, viz. bills of sale, or absolute transfers and mortgages. It precludes trusts, &c. from affecting the title of registered transferees or mortgagees, but it also prescribes a course of proceeding which may prevent the perpetration of such monstrous frauds as were possible under the former registry acts. Lincoln's-inn is to be the theatre of this course of action. By the 65th section Courts of equity may restrain for a time the dealings with any "such" ship*. This express right of interference is given without prejudice to the ordinary powers of the Court. When were such powers ever assumed but in Armstrong v. Armstrong?

It would seem that this 65th section will enable a Court of equity to impound a ship until its powers of decreeing a specific performance of a contract, or transfer from a trustee, can be exercised, or a vesting order under the Trustee Act, 1850, (see sect. 10 of the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act, 1855), made; and if this be the correct view, it certainly seems a beneficial provision.

Yours &c.,

OBSERVER.

EXTRACTS FROM THE APPENDIX TO THE REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONERS.

5. The present classification is also likely to create error and confusion in references to acts, there being now in every session three different acts bearing the same number; and this objection becomes more serious now that the custom of referring to acts by the number of the chapter only is becoming more common. The distinction attempted of marking one series with Arabic and another with Roman numerals is almost useless; it is almost sure to be lost in copying drafts of bills; and even in the printed copies of acts is so little attended to, that in the quarto edition printed by the Queen's printer the public general statutes are numbered in Arabic numerals in the running title, and in Roman numerals at the commencement of the chapters. Numerous instances have already occurred of acts of the "local and personal" series being referred to in other acts as if they belonged to the "public general" series; three instances will be found in the schedule to a single act, the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 42. (See p. 203 of the Third Report of the late Commission). It is unnecessary to point out what serious consequences might result from the repeal of an act of the public general series when one of the local series was intended. Numbers are particularly liable to errors in copying and in the press; and even if the single series now proposed is adopted, it will be advisable (as already suggested) to refer to the title of an act, as well as to the year and chapter, in all important cases.

Instructions to Draftsmen.

The Board consider it very desirable that all the bills prepared under their superintendence should be framed on uniform principles, and in a uniform style; they have therefore caused the following general rules and suggestions to be drawn up, which they request that draftsmen will observe as far as possible in drawing consolidated bills, without, however, considering them as absolutely inflexible where special reasons can be assigned for departing from them.

1. As the immediate object of the commission is only to consolidate, not to amend, the law, the draftsman should consider it his duty, in the absence of special instructions, to present as correctly as possible the effect of the statutes in force, without introducing amendments beyond the correction of clerical errors and omissions which appear from internal evidence to be unintentional. Such amendments of the law as it may appear to him advisable to suggest he should, where practicable, present in a separate form; and in cases where they are necessarily mixed up with other matter he should be careful to note what is new.

* What does this "such" refer to? It would be awkward were it held to extend to those cases only where the ship had to be sold, so that both her character and the pockets of the alien successors might be protected.

2. It is advisable to repeat exactly the material words of existing statutes, wherever such a course is compatible with concise and effectual consolidation.

3. The royal commission expressly authorises the incorporation of the common or unwritten law, when found desirable, in the course of consolidating the statute law; some latitude, therefore, on this point is allowed to the draftsman; but he should bear in mind that the codification of the common law is no part of the objects of the present commission, and that he is not to incorporate any part of it, except where he finds that he cannot produce a satisfactory consolidation of the statute law without it.

4. On the general subject of the proper style and phraseology of acts of Parliament, the following extract from a paper in the Third Report of the late Board contains, perhaps, all that can be usefully laid down for the guidance of draftsmen. It is there observed, that "brevity and perspicuity in acts of Parliament are to be attained only as they are to be attained in all other compositions—by observing the rules of grammar and logic. All the faults of the statutes as to form and style which require remedy are purely literary faults, and may be remedied, and can only be remedied, by a purely literary reform, without any legislative assistance or interference. All that is wanted is, that the persons who draw acts of Parliament should be firmly resolved to use a plain and concise style, to choose with care the proper words to express their meaning, and never to use a word that is not wanted; and, above all, to assume that they are writing for persons of ordinary candour and intelligence, and not, as is now the practice, to think it necessary to provide, in terms, against every foolish and unworthy quibble that unfair or unreasonable persons may possibly suggest. So long as acts of Parliament are drawn on the assumption that judges or others will not understand, or will pretend not to understand, what is meant by 'the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 1,' until the Legislature enacts that they may and shall understand it, it is vain to hope that any improvement as to brevity and perspicuity is attainable."

It is conceived, that, as a general rule, brevity is only desirable within the limits above suggested; that acts of Parliament should be specimens of pure English; and that what has been termed a "parliamentary short hand" is not required. Remarks on this subject will be found in the paper above cited, (Third Report, p. 232).

In some modern acts of Parliament it seems to have been assumed that no new phraseology, new modes of reference, or other formal improvements may be introduced without giving an express legislative sanction to the innovation. Many interpretation clauses, the enactments authorising the use of short titles, and other similar provisions, appear to have been inserted under this impression. Such provisions, however, cannot be necessary, and generally have an awkward appearance. If intelligible language is used, a declaration that it shall be understood cannot be needed; and for the Legislature to give itself permission to express its will in what form it pleases must be at least superfluous.

As a general rule, it is convenient to arrange the matter in shorter paragraphs than are now commonly met with.

5. "Interpretation clauses," or definitions, have in recent legislation been introduced in a very inconsiderate manner, and a great number of those in modern acts are objectionable, or at least superfluous; but symbols, if properly used, are certainly often useful.

By a symbol is meant a short way of expressing an assemblage of many particulars for which ordinary language provides no general term; and where such assemblages of particulars have to be several times repeated in the course of an act, it is proper and convenient to use a symbol in their place, and to give a definition of what it is intended to mean; but care should be taken, first, not to use such symbols except where language does not provide an adequate generic term; and, secondly, so to select and employ the symbols as to make it always apparent that they are symbols, and not used in their primary sense.

An instance of disregard of the first of these cautions is the common provision that "lands" shall mean "messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments," where, as "hereditaments" includes all the rest, that word might have been used without any interpretation clause at all; and as an instance of uncertainty whether a word is used in its symbolic or its primary sense, the late case of Bartlett v. Kirwood (2 El. & Bl. 771) may be referred to, where a doubt arose whether the word "year" was used in its ordinary sense, or in that which had previously been given to it by the interpretation clause. It seems scarcely necessary to add, as a further caution, that words need never be interpreted unless there is some reason to suppose that they will not be rightly understood unless interpreted, or that two symbols should never be provided for one set of particulars; yet both these rules are often disregarded.

Some attempts have been made by the Legislature to enact some general interpretations or definitions of a different nature from the symbols above adverted to; that is, to fix arbitrarily and prospectively the meaning of words which are in their nature ambiguous. This is an erroneous practice, and likely to lead to confusion. If a word is ambiguous—that is, if there is only one word to signify two different things—it is a defect in the language, which should, and easily can, be guarded against by the use of a proper context; but to enact generally that henceforth the word shall only mean one of the two things that it really means is not within the proper functions of legislation. However, it is necessary that the draftsman should bear in mind that there are some enactments of this kind, in order that he may frame his language accordingly: there are the 20 Geo. 2, c. 42, s. 3; the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28, s. 14; and the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 21, and possibly some others.

6. There are some cases in which it is convenient to give model forms of the documents to be used in carrying out the provisions of an act; as, where the act is to be worked by a large number of persons in inferior official situations, without any central directing authority, as magistrates' clerks, constables, &c.; but, except in cases of this kind, it is better not to prescribe any forms in the act itself, but to empower some competent person or court to prepare them. The same remark applies to the insertion of detailed rules, directing the mode in which the principle of an enactment is to be carried out. When no considerations of practical convenience interfere, it is better to leave these also to be settled by the authority intrusted with the working of the act. This course both greatly shortens acts of Parliament, and makes it easier to alter the rules from time to time, after they have been tested by experience. There are also numerous cases in which it seems to have been considered in modern acts of Parliament that forms must be laid down by authority, in which no assistance of the kind can be required by any persons of ordinary intelligence. For instance, the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 27, informs the registrar of friendly societies that he may certify that the rules of a society are in conformity to law, in this form:—

"I hereby certify that these rules [or alterations of rules] are in conformity to law, and to the provisions of the statutes in force relating to friendly societies."

DART'S VENDORS AND PURCHASERS.

A COMPENDIUM of the LAW and PRACTICE of VENDORS and PURCHASERS of REAL ESTATES; comprising the Authorities down to the Time of Publication. By J. HENRY DART, Esq., Barrister at Law. Second Edition. In 8vo., price 21s. boards.

In the case of Ware v. Lord Egmout the Vice-Chancellor referred to this work in these terms:—"A learned text-writer on this subject, Mr. Dart, in a book of very great merit, his 'Vendors and Purchasers,' enters into a disquisition on this judgment, &c."—18 Jurist, p. 372.

"In conclusion, we recommend this work to the practitioner as a complete book, and one that will warrant his confidence, and furnish able assistance in all matters relating to the sale and purchase of estates; and we think no better book can be read by students, for the purpose of giving them a condensed view of the subject, and enabling them to see the application of those principles and rules with which a general study of the law has furnished them."—Law Student's Magazine.

"Mr. Dart's labours have produced in this compendium a readable book for the use of beginners. He has paid particular attention to the attainment of a logical arrangement, and a clear and concise style. . . . Without sacrificing its character as an elementary treatise, Mr. Dart has also made an useful book of practice. . . . The work is well worthy of a place, not only in the general library, but in that selection of books which the working lawyer looks upon as his best tools; which come most readily to his hand, and which he gets to look upon as a part of himself."—Law Review, May 1, 1851.

"The work is short, readable, and very accurate. . . . With these quotations we will close our notice of a work which is obviously prepared with great care, and will, we think, become a standard text-book."—Jurist, March 2, 1851.

"Its plan is well arranged, the cases are carefully collected, the law is clearly expounded, and in every part of the treatise there is a great deal of learning. . . . The style is singularly compact."—Law Times, March 8, 1851.

The attention of the Profession is invited to the advantages offered by this Office to Solicitors and their Clients, which will be found to be greater than in most other Life Offices.

ADVANTAGES TO THE ASSURED.

1. Four-fifths of the Profits are divided triennially amongst the Assured.

In some Offices the Assured may not be entitled to a Bonus until the expiration of ten years from the time of effecting the Policy, whilst in this Office three years is the utmost limit.

2. At the first division of Profits in May, 1853, a Reversionary Bonus, averaging 45l. per cent., was declared on all Participating Policies. In some cases the Bonus exceeded 61l. per cent. on the premiums paid.

On reference to the Prospectuses of some of the principal Offices, it will be found that the Bonus on their first division was much less, viz. 29l. per cent.

3. The next division of Profits will be declared in May, 1856, when all Policies effected in 1855 will participate.

In most Offices Assurers do not participate in the Profits until after payment of three to five annual premiums, but in this Office they may participate on payment of a single premium.

ADVANTAGES TO THE PROFESSION.

A Commission of 10l. per cent. is allowed on the first year's premium, and 5l. per cent. annually afterwards; and, as an additional advantage to persons introducing business, the Shareholders have by the Deed of Settlement given up half of their Profits for the benefit of such persons as extra Commission.

The extra Commission paid in 1853 to persons introducing business was as follows:—

Ordinary Commission paid.	Extra Commission paid.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, OCTOBER 6, 1855.

THE number of undefended actions upon bills of exchange and promissory notes, although small in proportion to the immense amount of "paper" in circulation, has yet been found sufficiently large for the special notice of the Legislature. After the 24th of this month all actions upon these negotiable instruments, if commenced within six months after they have become due, may, and therefore probably will, be brought in accordance with the provisions of the stat. 18 & 19 Vict. c. 67, intitled "An Act to facilitate the Remedies on Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes by the Prevention of frivolous or fictitious Defences to Actions thereon*." The general effect of this statute will be to give the holder of a bill of exchange or promissory note a judgment for the principal and interest, together with the expenses of noting, at the expiration of twelve days from the time it becomes due, unless there is a legal or equitable ground for its non-payment. The procedure is very simple, and analogous to that which was introduced by the Common-law Procedure Act, 1852, upon writs specially indorsed. A writ of summons is to be issued in the form given in the schedule to the act, warning the defendant, that unless within twelve days after service, inclusive of the day of service, he obtains leave from one of the judges of the courts at Westminster to appear, and does within that time appear, the plaintiff may proceed to judgment and execution.

The memorandum that the writ is to be served within six calendar months from its date, or from its renewal, and the indorsements as to the person issuing the writ and the person serving it, are the same as on ordinary writs of summons. Another indorsement to be made is the following:—

"The plaintiff claims £—, principal and interest, [or, £—, balance of principal and interest], due to him as the payee [or, indorsee] of a bill of exchange or promissory note, of which the following is a copy, [here copy bill of exchange, &c., and all indorsements]; and if the amount thereof be paid to the plaintiff or his attorney within — days from the service hereof, further proceedings will be stayed."

It will be observed, that, first, nothing is here stated as to the expenses of noting, which formerly could not be recovered; but now, by sect. 5 of this act, the holder of a dishonoured bill of exchange, &c. has the same remedy for the recovery of "the expenses incurred in noting the same for non-acceptance or non-payment, or otherwise, by reason of such dishonour," as he has under the act for the recovery of the amount of the bill or note. When such expenses are claimed, therefore, they should be mentioned in the indorsement, stating the amount, and the account on which it is claimed. Thus, after copying the bill or note, the indorsement may run thus—"And the plaintiff also claims — for expenses incurred by him in noting the said bill of exchange [or, promissory note] for non-payment [or, non-acceptance] thereof." Secondly, it will be seen that a blank is left for the number of days within which further proceedings may be stayed on payment of the amount; but we presume that four days is the time that ought to be specified, that being the period indorsed on writs under the Common-law Procedure Act, 1852, (sect. 8), and that act, together with the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, and the rules thereunder, being extended, as far as may be, to proceedings under this act. (Sect. 7).

A further notice is to be indorsed on the writ, to the effect, that unless the defendant appears within the twelve days, the plaintiff may sign final judgment for any sum not exceeding the amount claimed, and the sum of £— for costs. It also states that leave to appear may be obtained on application at the judge's chambers, on an affidavit "shewing that there is a defence to the action on the merits, or that it is reasonable that the defendant should be allowed to appear." The sum inserted for costs will be an amount fixed by the masters, and approved of by the judge; or if more than such sum be claimed, the costs must be taxed in the ordinary way. One writ may be issued against all or any of the parties to the bill or note, and is to be the commencement of an action or actions against the parties therein named respectively, and all subsequent proceedings are to be as if separate writs had been issued.

* See 1 Jur., N. S., "Statutes," p. 17.

Within the period of twelve days a judge may give the defendant leave to appear and defend on paying into court the sum indorsed on the writ, or upon affidavits which disclose a legal or equitable defence, or such facts as would make it incumbent on the holder to prove consideration, (e. g. fraud in the inception of the bill), or such other facts as the judge may deem sufficient, and on such terms, as to security or otherwise, as to the judge may seem fit. He may also order the bill or note to be forthwith deposited with an officer of the court, and all proceedings to be stayed until the plaintiff shall have given security for the costs. This will tend to check indorsements to mere men of straw, so that they may sue as trustees for others upon doubtful or tainted instruments.

If, however, no appearance be entered, the plaintiff, on filing an affidavit of personal service within the jurisdiction of the court, or an order for leave to proceed, (see the Common-law Procedure Act, 1852, sect. 17), and a copy of the writ and indorsements thereon, may sign final judgment and issue execution forthwith. The form of judgment is given in the schedule; the amount of interest may be calculated up to the date of the judgment. No proceeding in error lies on such judgment, but it may be set aside under special circumstances, and the defendant be let in to defend the action.

The act is not to extend to Ireland or Scotland, but it is to apply to the Court of Common Pleas of Lancaster and the Court of Pleas at Durham, and its provisions may be extended by Order in Council to any court of record in England and Wales.

It should be observed that the proceedings under this act are not applicable to cases where the defendant is out of the jurisdiction, (see the Common-law Procedure Act, 1852, sects. 18, 19); for independently of the 1st section, requiring the affidavit of personal service to be of service within the jurisdiction, the form of writ is not adapted to any other service, and the period for appearance is limited to twelve days.

CONSOLIDATION OF THE STATUTE LAW.

Matters are often put into schedules which would come more properly in the body of the act. A schedule is properly something supplementary, and it is not a simple or natural style to relegate that which is the principal subject of an act to a schedule, unless from its form or length it cannot conveniently be introduced in the structure of a sentence. As an instance of the fault referred to, the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 80, may be cited, where we find an enactment that "the provisional order of the General Board of Health referred to in the schedule, applying the Public Health Act, 1848, to the borough of Great Yarmouth, in the county of Norfolk," shall be confirmed; and on turning to the schedule we find that it contains only these words—"Provisional order of the General Board of Health submitted for the confirmation of Parliament. Great Yarmouth." The schedule in an enactment of this kind ought to be incorporated in the clause which refers to it, as indeed in this instance it is, so that it is superfluous as well as misplaced.

7. The practice of making a new law by incorporating by reference the provisions of existing acts on another subject, so as to make it necessary to read them mutatis mutandis, should be used with great caution, as the result often is, that brevity is attained at the cost of error and confusion.

8. It is unsafe to refer to acts by the number of the year and chapter only. Numbers are particularly liable to be miscopied and misprinted; and with respect to acts of the "local and personal (public)" and the "private" series, there is a further risk that they will not be distinguished from acts of the "public general" series bearing the same number. The titles of acts should always be referred to, not necessarily at length, but enough to identify them; the year and chapter should also be mentioned for convenience of reference.

Several instances have already occurred of erroneous reference to numbers; some will be found enumerated in the First Report of the former Commission, pp. 24-27; and in the Third Report, p. 203.

Parliamentary "short titles" are not convenient, from not giving the number of the chapter, which makes it necessary to turn to the index before they can be found in the statute-book.

9. Such expressions as "January last," "January next," &c. should be avoided. Four acts of Parliament at least have been made necessary within the present century to correct the consequences of using such referential expressions instead of absolute ones—43 Geo. 3, c. 104; 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 71; 13 & 14 Vict. c. 19; 13 & 14 Vict. c. 27.

10. Every enactment which is superseded or rendered unnecessary by a new act ought to be expressly and in terms repealed. Enactments that "all acts inconsistent with this act," or "so much of such and such an act as is inconsistent with this act," shall be repealed, or "any law or usage to the contrary notwithstanding," should never be inserted. They have in reality no effect, for the inconsistency itself is a repeal, and they convey no available information to any one. Where accidental circumstances make it impossible to specify what former acts are repealed, it is of no use to say anything about repeals at all.

With respect to the form of repeals, they may sometimes be conveniently effected by separate acts, (as recommended by Mr. Coode in the First Report of the late Board, p. 82), so that "the repealing act and the repealed act would sleep together;" and the plan has been adopted in the case of the Merchant Shipping Act of last session, (c. 120), and in some earlier instances; in other cases this course would not be practically so convenient as to have the new enactments and the repeals in a single act. On this subject, therefore, no general rule can be laid down, and the draftsman must be guided by the nature of the subject. The tabular form is the clearest way of enumerating acts for repeal.

11. Considerable confusion both of language and thought is produced by the indiscriminate use of "shall" and "may," or other compulsory and permissive terms, and also by the uncertain way in which enactments are made with reference to time. Accuracy in this respect is important.

12. The modern plan of giving an act a long title, and then inserting a clause that a certain combination of words may be used as the title instead, appears to be awkward and unnecessary. A brief title should simply be prefixed to every act; and it is conceived that any words which refer to an act in such a manner as plainly to identify it are a sufficient reference, without the assistance of any declaratory enactment. The uncouth form of most of these "short titles" is also objectionable. Such combinations of words, for instance, as "The Metropolitan Improvements Repayment out of Consolidated Fund Act, 1853," or "The Great Southern and Western Railway Ireland Extension Portarlington to Tullamore Act, 1847," are certainly very unlike pure English. Some further observations on the subject of short titles will be found at p. 26 of the First Report and at p. 229 of the Third Report of the former Commission.

13. The only case in which a preamble ought to be prefixed to an act is where a statement is necessary in order to make the meaning of the enactment intelligible; but it has become very common to insert preambles which contain, not a statement to render the enactment intelligible, but a statement of the reasons which make it necessary or expedient to pass the bill. It is evident that these reasons, however desirable it may be to present them to the Legislature during its deliberations, are only an incumbrance to the act, as such. Such preambles should therefore be avoided by the draftsman, together with such superfluous recitals as that "it is expedient to alter the law," &c.

14. Except in the few cases where acts are passed to meet a sudden emergency, no act ought to come in force till a fair time has elapsed after its passing, to allow the public to become acquainted with it. It would be convenient if there were two or four fixed days in the year, on one of which all acts should come in force.

List of Terms to which, when used in future Acts, a special Meaning is attached by Statute.

I.—IN ALL ACTS.

Affidavit.—See Oath.

Continuing Acts.—"Where any bill may have been or shall be introduced into this present or any future session of Parliament for the continuance of any act which would expire in such sessions, and such act shall have expired before the bill for continuing the same shall have received the royal assent, such continuing act shall be deemed and taken to have effect from the date of the expiration of the act intended to be continued, as fully and effectually, to all intents and purposes, as if such continuing act had actually passed before the expiration of such act, except it shall be otherwise especially provided in such continuing act: provided nevertheless, that nothing herein contained shall extend or be construed to extend to affect any person or persons with any punishment, penalty, or forfeiture whatsoever, by reason of anything done or omitted to be done by any such person or persons, contrary to the provisions of the act so continued, between the expiration of the same and the date at which the act continuing the same may have received or shall receive the royal assent." (48 Geo. 3, c. 106).

County "shall be held to mean also county of a town or of a city, unless such extended meaning is expressly excluded by words." (13 & 14 Vict. c. 21, s. 4).

England.—"In all cases where the kingdom of England, or that part of Great Britain called England, hath been or shall be mentioned in any act of Parliament, the same has been and shall from henceforth be deemed and taken to comprehend and include the dominion of Wales and town of Berwick-upon-Tweed." (20 Geo. 2, c. 42, s. 3).

Expiration of Acts.—See Continuing Acts. Repeals.

Gender and Number.—"Words importing the masculine gender shall be deemed and taken to include females, and the singular to include the plural, and the plural the singular, unless the contrary as to gender or number is expressly provided." (13 & 14 Vict. c. 21, s. 4).

Land "shall include messuages, tenements, and hereditaments, houses and buildings, of any tenure, unless where there are words to exclude houses and buildings, or to restrict the meaning to tenements of some particular tenure." (13 & 14 Vict. c. 21, s. 4).

Month "shall be deemed and taken to mean calendar month, unless words be added shewing lunar month to be intended." (13 & 14 Vict. c. 21, s. 4).

Number.—See Gender.

Oath, Swear, and Affidavit "shall include affirmation, declaration, affirming and declaring, in the case of persons by law allowed to declare or affirm instead of swearing." (13 & 14 Vict. c. 21, s. 4).

[Note.—The acts permitting affirmations and declarations in lieu of oaths are also themselves prospective. (3 & 4 Will. 4, cc. 49, 82; 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 62).]

Public Act.—"Every act shall be deemed and taken to be a public act, and shall be judicially taken notice of as such, unless the contrary be expressly provided and declared by such act." (13 & 14 Vict. c. 21, s. 7).

[Note.—This refers to judicial recognition only, and does not affect the principles of construction of private acts. (Dawson v. Paver, 5 Hare; The Trustees of the Birkenhead Docks v. The Birkenhead Dock Company, Lords Justices, 1853.)]

Repeals.—"Where any act repealing any former act is itself repealed, such last repeal shall not revive the provisions before repealed, unless words be added reviving such act or provisions." (13 & 14 Vict. c. 21, s. 5).

"Wherever any act is made repealing any former act, and substituting some provisions instead of the provisions repealed, such provisions so repealed shall remain in force until the substituted provisions shall come into operation by force of the last-made act." (13 & 14 Vict. c. 21, s. 6).

Swear.—See Oath.

Treasury, (Lords of).—"Where any warrant, appointment, authority, approval, instrument, or act whatsoever is by any act of Parliament or otherwise required to be issued, made, signified, or done by or under the hands of the said commissioners, or by or under the hands of any three or more of them, every such warrant, appointment, authority, approval, instrument, or act may be issued, made, signified, or done by or under the hands of any two or more of the said commissioners, and when so issued, made, signified, or done as aforesaid, shall be binding, and have the same effect to all intents and purposes as if issued, made, signified, or done by or under the hands of the said commissioners, or by or under the hands of any three or more of them, as the case may require." (12 & 13 Vict. c. 89).

[Note.—It may be doubted whether the terms of this enactment are prospective, but they are considered and acted on as such by the Lords of the Treasury.]

* * None of the statutes above cited contain any general declaration that the meanings thereby affixed may be modified by the context.

II.—IN CRIMINAL ACTS.

Gender, Number, Person.—By the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28, s. 14, it is enacted, that "wherever this or any other statute relating to any offence, whether punishable upon indictment or summary conviction, in describing or referring to the offence, or the subject-matter on or with respect to which it shall be committed, or the offender or the party affected or intended to be affected by the offence, hath used or shall use words importing the singular number or the masculine gender only, yet the statute shall be understood to include several matters as well as one matter, and several persons as well as one person, and females as well as males, and bodies corporate as well as individuals, unless it be otherwise specially provided, or there be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction; and wherever any forfeiture or penalty is payable to a party aggrieved, it shall be paid to a body corporate in every case where such body shall be the party aggrieved."

III.—IN CUSTOMS ACTS.

The 21st section of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 122, is as follows:—"Where any of the terms mentioned in the 367th section of the Customs Consolidation Act, 1853, are used in this or any other act relating to the Customs, the terms so used shall have the same interpretation and meaning as are given to them in the said section." This enactment is apparently prospective.

The interpretations in the 367th section of the Customs Consolidation Act, 1853, (10 & 17 Vict. c. 107), are as follows:—

Assistant Barrister "shall, with respect to matters or proceedings in the county of Dublin, be construed as meaning the chairman of Kilmainham; and with respect to matters or proceedings in the city of Dublin, be construed as meaning the recorder of the city of Dublin."

Attorney-General "shall include Solicitor-General, or other chief law officer of the Crown in any of her Majesty's possessions abroad where there is no Attorney-General."

British Possession "shall include colony, plantation, island, territory, or settlement belonging to her Majesty."

Channel Islands "shall mean the islands of Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, and Sark."

Collector and Comptroller.—"Generally, wherever any act, matter, or thing shall or may be required by this or any other act of Parliament to be done by or with the collector and comptroller of any port or place, the same may be done by or with the collector or comptroller or other principal acting officer of Customs at such port or place, and be as valid and effectual as if done by or with any collector and comptroller."

Commissioners of the Treasury "shall mean the Lords Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury."

Commissioners of Customs "shall mean the Commissioners of her Majesty's Customs."

County "shall mean and include any city, county of a city, county of a town, borough, or other magisterial jurisdiction, or any place or district enumerated in sect. 274 of this act, unless there be something in the subject or context regnant to such construction."

[Note.—This seems to be a mistake for sect. 277, which is in these terms:—"Where any offence against this or any other act relating to the Customs shall be committed in any city, borough, liberty, division, franchise, or town corporate, any justice or justices having jurisdiction therein, and any justice or justices of any county within which the same is or are situated, shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the same; and all powers vested in any justice or justices of the peace by virtue of this act shall be and the same are hereby vested in, and may be exercised in the Isle of Man or the Channel Islands by any governor, deemster, or other magistrate of the said island or islands; and for the purposes of this act the jurisdiction of the magistrates of the borough of Gravesend, in the county of Kent, shall be deemed to extend on the river Thames from Yantlet Creek to Broadness Point, in the Northfleet Hope, and shall include every part of the said river between those limits respectively."]

Drawback "shall include bounty."

Her Majesty "shall mean her Majesty, her heirs and successors."

Justice "shall mean justice of the peace, and include deemster or any other magistrate."

Landing Waiter "shall include any officer duly authorised to superintend the landing and examination of goods on their importation."

Limits of East India Company's Charter "shall mean the Cape of Good Hope, and all places and seas eastward thereof, to the Straits of Magellan."

Master "shall mean the person having or taking the charge or command of any ship."

Queen's Warehouse "shall mean any place provided by the Crown for lodging goods therein for security of the Customs."

Seaman "shall include mate, mariner, sailor, or landsman, being one of the crew of any ship."

Ship "shall mean ship or vessel of any description, unless used to distinguish a ship from a sloop or some other description of vessel."

Warehouse "shall mean any place in which goods entered to be warehoused may be lodged, kept, and secured."

* * Neither of the Customs Acts above mentioned contains any general declaration that the meanings thereby affixed may be modified by the context.

IV.—IN FRIENDLY SOCIETIES ACTS.

By the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 56, s. 1, it is enacted that friendly societies established under the 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, and the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 40, which grant policies of assurance exceeding 1000*l.*, "shall cease to be friendly societies, and shall not be affected by the provisions of any act passed in the present or any future session of Parliament relating to friendly societies, unless therein expressly named."

V.—IN POOR LAW ACTS.

"Except where it is otherwise expressly provided, all provisions in any act now passed, or hereafter to be passed, relating to the officers of boards of guardians constituted under the provisions of the said first-recited act, (the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76), or to the workhouses under the management of such guardians, shall apply to all officers appointed by any district board, and to all workhouses under the management of any district board." (7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 74).

VI.—IN POST-OFFICE ACTS.

The interpretation clause of the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 47, is expressed to be "for the interpretation of the Post-office laws;" and by the same clause it is declared, that "the terms 'Post-office acts' and 'Post-office laws' shall mean all acts relating to the management of the post, or to the establishment of the Post-office, or to postage duties from time to time in force."

In addition to this enactment, the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 96, s. 71, contains the following enactment:—"The following terms and expressions, wherever used in this or any other Post-office act, shall have the several interpretations hereinafter respectively set forth;" and after attaching particular interpretations to several words, it proceeds as follows:—"The several other terms and expressions used in this act shall be construed according to the respective interpretations of the terms and expressions contained in the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36, so far as those interpretations are not repugnant to the subject or inconsistent with the context of such terms and expressions."

The following are all the interpretations contained in the two acts. It would appear that some of those in the former act are superseded by the latter:—

Between.—"Whenever the term 'between' is used in reference to the transmission of letters, newspapers, parliamentary proceedings, or other things, between one place and another, it shall apply equally to the transmission from either place to the other." (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 47).

British Letter "shall mean a letter transmitted within the United Kingdom." (Ib.)

ADVANTAGES TO THE ASSURED.

1. Four-fifths of the Profits are divided triennially amongst the Assured.

In some Offices the Assured may not be entitled to a Bonus until the expiration of ten years from the time of effecting the Policy, whilst in this Office three years is the utmost limit.

2. At the first division of Profits in May, 1853, a Reversionary Bonus, averaging 45l. per cent., was declared on all Participating Policies. In some cases the Bonus exceeded 61l. per cent. on the premiums paid.

On reference to the Prospectuses of some of the principal Offices, it will be found that the Bonus on their first division was much less, viz. 29l. per cent.

3. The next division of Profits will be declared in May, 1856, when all Policies effected in 1855 will participate.

In most Offices Assurers do not participate in the Profits until after payment of from three to five annual premiums, but in this Office they may participate on payment of a single premium.

ADVANTAGES TO THE PROFESSION.

A Commission of 10l. per cent. is allowed on the first year's premium, and 5l. per cent. annually afterwards; and, as an additional advantage to persons introducing business, the Shareholders have by the Deed of Settlement given up half of their Profits for the benefit of such persons as extra Commission.

The extra Commission paid in 1853 to persons introducing business was as follows:—

Ordinary Commission paid.	Extra Commission paid.

THE LAW OF LANDLORD AND TENANT: being a Course of Lectures delivered by the late JOHN WILLIAM SMITH, Esq., Author of "A Selection of Leading Cases," &c. With Notes and Additions, by FREDERIC PHILIP MAUDE, Esq., Barrister at Law.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, OCTOBER 13, 1855.

THE doctrine of reputed ownership has undergone considerable modification in recent times—a result achieved mainly by the Court of Exchequer. It was formerly used in many instances as an instrument for the transfer to a bankrupt's creditors of property which never belonged to their debtor, and which probably had not in any manner influenced the amount of the credit given to him. It was paying the debts of A. with the goods of B., who had been unfortunate enough to leave them in A.'s hands for a few days, it might be for convenience or security; B. himself, perhaps, believing A. to be a man of substance from the very credit which he was obtaining from those men who now divide amongst them B.'s goods.

After having decided that goods whereof the bankrupt is reputed owner do not pass to the assignees under the Bankrupt-law Consolidation Act without a special order of the Court of Bankruptcy for that purpose, (Healop v. Baker, 6 Exch. 740; 8 Exch. 411; see also Quartermaine v. Bittlestone, 13 C. B. 133), the Court of Exchequer has, with a liberal appreciation of the requirements and at the same time the varying circumstances of trade, laid down rules upon the subject, which on the one hand render caution in the giving of credit to "outward appearances" more advisable than ever, and on the other hand tend to preserve unto each man his own property, instead of distributing it by a kind of legal spoliation for the benefit of third persons. We allude to the case of Bell v. Hamilton and Others, (18 Jur., part 1, p. 1109; S. C., 24 L. J., Ex., 45), from which the following propositions may be deduced:—

1. That in order to render goods in the possession, order, or disposition of a bankrupt, two things must concur—first, they must be in his possession under such circumstances as to render him reputed owner of the goods; and, secondly, they must have been left in his possession through some impropriety or laches of the true owner, under circumstances calculated to enable the bankrupt to obtain a false credit by inducing the world to look on him as the true owner.

2. That the question whether goods are in the possession, &c. of a bankrupt may depend on the usage of some particular trade, which may vary at different times and places.

3. That where property is left by the true owner in a shop, warehouse, or other place where goods are notoriously left for other purposes than for sale, the proprietor of the shop, &c. is not reputed owner of them within the statute.

The bankrupt in Bell v. Hamilton was a clockmaker, and kept clocks in his shop for sale, and also clocks belonging to other persons for repair. In July, 1853, the plaintiff bought a clock of him, but desired it to be kept until he moved into a new house. In March, 1854, he purchased two more clocks, and left them with the bankrupt to be cleaned, which might have been done in three days. On the 7th April the bankruptcy took place, at which time the three clocks were in the shop. They were held not liable to seizure by the assignees.

On their behalf it was urged that the bankrupt had once been owner of the clocks, and that the change of property had not been sufficiently indicated. Reference was made to Knowles v. Horsfall, (5 B. & Al. 134), in which casks of brandy, which had been purchased of a spirit merchant, and left on his premises for convenience, passed to the assignees; and Lingard v. Messior, (1 B. & Cr. 308), in which machinery, of which the bankrupt had once been the real owner, had been purchased by the defendant, and then demised by him to the bankrupt at an annual rent, the defendant's initials having been first marked upon it; and it was held that it passed to the assignees.

With regard to the former case, Parke, B., said that the seller kept only his own brandies for sale, and therefore all in his vaults appeared to be his, and that it would have been otherwise if it had been shewn that the merchant was in the habit of receiving into his possession the goods of other people. And Alderson, B., said that it was then rather a question as to the conclusion which the Court ought to draw from the facts, and he almost regretted having reported the case. Lingard v. Messiter was disposed of by the remark that the value of a decision is affected by the change of circumstances, and that if rightly decided at the period of its occurrence it would not be so decided now, as "it is notorious that machinery is often hired, and therefore there is no presumption that machinery in the possession of a manufacturer is his own; so, carriages are now notoriously hired. . . . Family plate in the possession of a silversmith ought not to pass to his assignees."—Per Pollock, C. B. Parke, B., said that he had always considered Lord Redesdale's exposition of the subject in Joy v. Campbell (1 Sch. & L. 328) as the best he had met with. It is this—"That clause refers to chattels in the possession of the bankrupt, 'in his order and disposition* with consent of the true owner.' That means where the possession, order, and disposition is in a person who is not the owner, to whom they do not properly belong, and who ought not to have them, but whom the owner permits unconscientiously, as the act supposes, to have such order and disposition. The object was to prevent deceit by a trader from the visible possession of property to which he was not entitled; but in the construction of the act the nature of the possession has always been considered."

This view was acquiesced in by the other learned judges of the Exchequer, and it will be found to pervade each of their judgments. It subjects the whole doctrine of reputed ownership to simple and intelligible tests, and removes from it the hardship and injustice with which it was chargeable. The loss of property under its influence is now a penalty for misconduct, rather than a punishment for not foreseeing that which no one else foresaw, and for indulging in a confidence which was shared by those very creditors who divided his goods amongst them.

Before quitting this subject we should observe that in Graham v. Furber (14 C. B. 134) it was held that the true owner has a right, at any time before the fiat, (or petition for adjudication), to take back his goods, provided he does so without notice of any prior act of bankruptcy, it being a "transaction" with the bankrupt within the meaning of sect. 133 of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106; and in Brewin v. Short and Others (1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 798) the Court of Queen's Bench went further, by holding, that if before the date of the fiat or petition, and before notice of an act of bankruptcy, the true owner bona fide demands possession of the goods, and, communicating with the bankrupt, does that which shows that the goods no longer with his consent remain in the possession, order, or disposition of the bankrupt, the title of the true owner is not defeated by a prior act of bankruptcy.

The Queen has been pleased to appoint William Johnstone Ritchie, Esq., to be one of the Puisne Judges of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick.

* The words used in the statute are, "possession, order, or disposition;" but Pollock, C. B., said that he should read "or" as "and."

VIII.—IN STAMP ACTS.

By the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 97, s. 20, it is provided, that wherever in that act, or any other act relating to stamp duties, "with reference to any person, offence, matter, or thing, any word or words is or are, or have been or shall be used, importing the singular number or the masculine gender only, yet such words shall be understood to include several persons as well as one person, females as well as males, bodies politic or corporate as well as individuals, and several matters and things as well as one matter or thing, unless it be otherwise specially provided, or there be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction; and that wherever the several words, terms, or expressions following are or shall be used in this act, or in any other such act as aforesaid, with reference to any deed or instrument, they shall be construed respectively in the manner hereinafter directed; (that is to say), the word 'write,' or the word 'written,' shall be respectively deemed to mean and include the several words 'print' or 'printed,' or 'partly write and partly print,' or 'partly written and partly printed,' as well as 'write' or 'written.'"

The 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 24, which recites the 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, and the 4 Geo. 4, c. 95, enacts, (sect. 20), that "all the powers, authorities, clauses, provisions, penalties, forfeitures, matters, and things contained in the said acts of the third and fourth years of the reign of his present Majesty, shall, so far as the same are not altered or varied by this present act, extend and be construed to extend to this act, and shall be applied and put in execution as fully and effectually, to all intents and purposes, as if the same were repeated and re-enacted in the body of this act, and made part thereof."

DART'S VENDORS AND PURCHASERS.

A COMPENDIUM of the LAW and PRACTICE of VENDORS and PURCHASERS of REAL ESTATES; comprising the Authorities down to the Time of Publication. By J. HENRY DART, Esq., Barrister at Law. Second Edition. In 8vo., price 21s. boards.

"In the case of Ware v. Lord Egmont the Vice-Chancellor referred to this work in these terms:—'A learned text-writer on this subject, Mr. Dart, in a book of very great merit, his 'Vendors and Purchasers,' enters into a disquisition on this judgment.' &c."—18 Jurist, p. 373.

"In conclusion, we recommend this work to the practitioner as a complete book, and one that will warrant his confidence, and furnish able assistance in all matters relating to the sale and purchase of estates; and we think no better book can be read by students, for the purpose of giving them a condensed view of the subject, and enabling them to see the application of those principles and rules with which a general study of the law has furnished them."—Law Student's Magazine.

"Mr. Dart's labours have produced in this compendium a readable book for the use of beginners. He has paid particular attention to the attainment of a logical arrangement, and a clear and concise style. . . . Without sacrificing its character as an elementary treatise, Mr. Dart has also made an useful book of practice. . . . The work is well worthy of a place, not only in the general library, but in that selection of books which the working lawyer looks upon as his best tools; which come most readily to his hand, and which he gets to look upon as a part of himself."—Law Review, May 1, 1851.

"The work is short, readable, and very accurate. . . . With these quotations we will close our notice of a work which is obviously prepared with great care, and will, we think, become a standard text-book."—Jurist, March 2, 1851.

"Its plan is well arranged, the cases are carefully collected, the law is clearly expounded, and in every part of the treatise there is a great deal of learning. . . . The style is singularly compact."—Law Times, March 8, 1851.

The attention of the Profession is invited to the advantages offered by this Office to Solicitors and their Clients, which will be found to be greater than in most other Life Offices.

ADVANTAGES TO THE ASSURED.

1. Four-fifths of the Profits are divided triennially amongst the Assured.

In some Offices the Assured may not be entitled to a Bonus until the expiration of ten years from the time of effecting the Policy, whilst in this Office three years is the utmost limit.

2. At the first division of Profits in May, 1855, a Reversionary Bonus, averaging 451. per cent., was declared on all Participating Policies. In some cases the Bonus exceeded 611. per cent. on the premiums paid.

On reference to the Prospectuses of some of the principal Offices, it will be found that the Bonus on their first division was much less, viz. 251. per cent.

3. The next division of Profits will be declared in May, 1856, when all Policies effected in 1855 will participate.

In most Offices Assurers do not participate in the Profits until after payment of from three to five annual premiums, but in this Office they may participate on payment of a single premium.

ADVANTAGES TO THE PROFESSION.

A Commission of 101. per cent. is allowed on the first year's premium, and 51. per cent. annually afterwards; and, as an additional advantage to persons introducing business, the Shareholders have by the Deed of Settlement given up half of their Profits for the benefit of such persons as extra Commission.

The extra Commission paid in 1853 to persons introducing business was as follows:—

Ordinary Commission paid.	Extra Commission paid.
£75 16 0	£54 12 11
188 9 3	135 7 3
63 6 6	45 13 9

THE JURIST.

LONDON, OCTOBER 20, 1855.

THE Legislature having thought fit to enable certain companies to obtain from the registrar of joint-stock companies a "certificate of complete registration with limited liability," and having conceived and expressed its design with more than usual imperfection, an attempt to ascertain the scope and effect of the act, so far as they are ascertainable without judicial aid, may be useful to our readers. The Limited Liability Act, 1855, (18 & 19 Vict. c. 133), gives the right to obtain a certificate of limited liability, on certain conditions, to all joint-stock companies (other than assurance companies) formed or to be formed under the Joint-stock Companies Registration Act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, or under any private act of Parliament. It does not mention chartered companies; and as banking companies are not within the Joint-stock Companies Registration Act, such companies cannot obtain the benefit of the Limited Liability Act unless they first procure an act of incorporation.

With respect to companies seeking limited liability on their original formation, the conditions are—

1. The proposal to form the company with limited liability shall be stated on the returns for provisional registration.

2. The word "limited" shall be the last word of the name of the company. [Ex. g. "The Patent Soot Bleaching Company, Limited."]

3. The deed of settlement shall state that the company is formed with limited liability.

4. The capital shall be divided into shares of a nominal value not less than 10*l*. The deed of settlement shall be executed by shareholders, not less than twenty-five in number, holding shares to the amount in the aggregate of at least three-fourths of the nominal capital of the company; and there shall have been paid up by each of such shareholders, on account of his shares, not less than 20*l*. per centum.

5. The payment of the above per-centage shall be acknowledged in or indorsed on (meaning, we presume, acknowledged by indorsement on) the deed of settlement, and shall be verified by a statutory declaration of the promoters, or any two of them. (The persons to whom the payment is to be made, and by whom it is to be acknowledged, are not indicated).

Upon such conditions (in addition to the conditions for obtaining complete registration under the Joint-stock Companies Registration Act) being complied with, the registrar must grant a certificate of complete registration with limited liability.

A certificate of complete registration with limited liability may be obtained by a company already completely registered, in the following manner:—

"The directors of such company may, with the consent of at least three-fourths in number and value of its shareholders who may be present, personally or by proxy, at any general meeting summoned for that purpose, make such alteration in the name" of the company [by adding the word "limited"], the "nominal value of shares, and deed of settlement of the company, as may be necessary for enabling it to comply with the conditions hereinbefore mentioned with respect to joint-stock companies seeking to obtain certificates of complete registration with limited liability; and upon compliance with such conditions, the registrar, after the affairs of the company shall, at the expense of the company, have been audited by some person appointed by the Board of Trade, and on certificate from the said Board that the complete solvency thereof has been established on such audit to its satisfaction, shall grant to such company by its new name a certificate of complete registration with limited liability." The directors, with the consent of the prescribed majority of shareholders, may "make such alteration in the name, nominal value of shares, and deed of settlement" as may be necessary for complying with the conditions. On this arises the question, how is the deed of settlement to be altered? A resolution, having the force of a clause in the deed of settlement, is an alteration of the deed of settlement, or at least of its provisions; but that is an alteration made by the meeting, and not by the directors. The directors are to alter the deed. It seems they cannot alter the deed which has been executed, for that would be to make it void. They must then prepare a new or supplementary deed. But must that deed be executed by all, or by three-fourths in value, or by any of the shareholders? Who can say? The main difficulty, however, is, to discover how the consent of three-fourths in number and value of the members present at a meeting is to enable the directors to raise the nominal value of shares—say of 5*l.* each—to 10*l.*, if a single shareholder holding a single share dissents. To raise the nominal value of each share, i. e. to double the capital and the liabilities of the shareholders, is out of the question. The shares must be consolidated. How can the single share of a single shareholder be consolidated, even with his consent? He might as well attempt, unaided, to commit a riot.

The method of procuring a certificate of limited liability by a company established by private act is the same as in the last case, except that no execution of a deed of settlement by twenty-five or any number of shareholders is required; and the change to be made in the name, and when necessary in the nominal value of the shares of the company, is not required to be effected by altering any deed of settlement; and the certificate of the Board of Trade is to affirm, not only the solvency of the company, but also the payment of 20*l.* per cent. of its nominal capital, which payment is not required to be stated or verified as in the case of companies established under the Registration Act.

The members of a joint-stock company which has so obtained a certificate of complete registration with limited liability are not to be liable under any judgment, decree, or order against the company, or for any debt or engagement of the company, otherwise than severally, each to the amount of the unpaid-up portion of his shares; and this liability is only to be enforced after execution or process in the nature of execution against the effects of the company has been issued, and sufficient has not been found, when the court or a judge of the court from which the process issued may grant an order for execution against any shareholder. There is no provision for giving notice of the application to the shareholder, but the Courts will probably require ten days' notice to be given, as in cases under the 68th section of the stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110.

The first observation that occurs upon this enactment is, that it only extends to the members of a joint-stock company which has so obtained a certificate of limited liability, i. e. has obtained it by complying with the prescribed conditions. There is no provision that the registrar's certificate shall be conclusive evidence of compliance with the conditions; and it follows, that if at the time when the certificate was granted the required per-centage of capital had not been paid up, though the deficiency was only 1*s.*, the certificate is worthless, and all the members are liable without limit. Every one, therefore, who joins a company registered with limited liability incurs the risk of unlimited liability, because he cannot be assured that the due proportion of capital was paid up before the certificate was granted. The case of The Eastern Archipelago Company is a document that such frauds are possible even when the directory is filled with eminent and respectable names.

In the Joint-stock Companies Registration Act it is expressly provided, that after execution against the company has proved unavailable, execution may issue against any shareholder for the time being, or against any person who was a shareholder within the last preceding three years. (Sect. 66). The provision for execution against shareholders in the Limited Liability Act is confined to existing shareholders—and with some shew of consistency, since the liability to creditors is assimilated to the liability for calls, and is limited to the amount not paid up on the shares; and a transfer of shares exonerates the transferor from liability for calls made after the transfer. But the consequence is, that the remedy which the act professes to give the creditors of the company to the extent of the subscribed and unpaid capital may be defeated by a transfer of the shares to a man of straw, and the winding up of a company—i. e. the stoppage of its proceedings, (for the metaphor is not taken from horology)—will be effected in a very simple and inexpensive manner. The process will be—execution against the property of the company; return of no effects; certain entries in the registers of transfers and of shareholders; and inspection of the register of shareholders by the creditor, from which he learns that the gentlemen now answerable for the whole unpaid capital of the company are, Timothy Twig, crossing sweeper, Ichabod Rip, licensed pedler, and Hans Wurst, out of employment and ready to answer any inquiries. The company will then be wound up, and dissolved—as breath into the wind.

In addition to this privilege of suing out execution against a pauper, and the provision that the deed of settlement shall be executed by at least twenty-five shareholders, who may the next moment transfer at once all their shares and all their liability to a domiciled citizen of Norfolk Island, there are these further provisions for the security of creditors:—

1. The company shall not raise funds by an increase of its nominal capital. This at least appears to be the drift of the 6th section, which enacts that no increase in the nominal capital of the company shall be advertised or otherwise acted on until it has been registered, and that no such increase shall be registered until it has been, not only advertised, but subscribed for, and paid up to the extent of 20*l.* per cent. on three-fourths of the amount. The prohibition is enforced by a penalty of 50*l.* on each director.

2. Directors paying dividends to shareholders out of insolvent assets are answerable to the creditors for the amount so paid. But if a capital of 1,000,000*l.* is subscribed for and paid up, and is repaid in the shape of dividends while the company is not in debt, the company may go on trading on the reputation of possessing the capital originally announced, without any one being liable for its debts.

3. Security for calls is not to be considered as payment of them; and directors assenting to any loan of money by the company to any shareholder are liable, to the extent of such loan and interest on it, to the creditors of the company. This seems to be a liability in addition to the liability of the borrower, and notwithstanding repayment of the loan. But though a loan to the shareholders is prohibited, a gift to them in the shape of dividend is not prohibited if the company is solvent at the time.

4. When three-fourths of the capital are lost or become unavailable from any cause, the company must be dissolved. This injunction is not enforced by any penalty; and the meaning of the word "unavailable" is left in doubt.

5. The auditor or one of the auditors of the company (except in the case of a company established by act of Parliament) must be submitted for approval to the Board of Trade, who may appoint another in his place.

The other noticeable provisions of the act are, that the company shall use its name (including the word "limited") on all its offices or places of business, and all its advertisements, notices, bills, and other documents; and that limited companies shall be within three Winding-up Acts, of which one cannot, by any human skill, be applied to any company, and the others are essentially inapplicable to a limited company.

Such is the principal Government measure of the session of 1855. Even the supporters of the design disapprove of the details of the act; but it has fulfilled the object for which, by powerful influence, it was forced upon the Government; and there is no probability of any amendment being attempted in the next session. It enables the promoters of a company to hold out the bait of limited liability—and, if they please, to make sure of such limitation—and that is all that was desired. The theorists, and those who have no interest in the matter otherwise than as it concerns justice and commercial morality, will be as powerless to amend the act as they were to improve or to delay the passing of the bill.

CONSOLIDATION OF THE STATUTE LAW.

EXTRACTS FROM THE APPENDIX TO THE REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONERS.

Observations on the "Expurgatory List of Statutes," ordered by the House of Commons to be printed, on the 29th January, 1855. (No. 36).

Although the present Statute-law Commission is not in any way responsible for the preparation or the publication of the list above mentioned, and in fact never had anything to do with it, yet it appears desirable, for several reasons which will appear in the course of the following observations, that the Board should have some account of the circumstances under which it was prepared, and of its present condition.

The list in question, as now printed, is a return to an address moved in the House of Commons on the 14th December, 1854, by Mr. Locke King, for "an Expurgatory List of Statutes prepared by Messrs. Anstey and Rogers, late Commissioners of Statute Law;" and Mr. Locke King has now given notice, that on the 19th June he will move a further resolution, to the effect, that "the preparation of a Declaratory Repealing Bill, of which the list now printed should form the groundwork, ought to be no longer delayed, and that such a bill ought to be forthwith directed to be prepared by the Statute-law Commissioners, for the purpose of being laid before Parliament."

No one acquainted with the history of the late Statute-law Board of 1853-4, and with the circumstances under which these and other motions have been brought before Parliament, can doubt that the intention of these motions is to express dissatisfaction with the proceedings of the late Board, and want of confidence in the present Commission; and with respect to the list now in question in particular, it is to be presumed that the act of causing it to be printed was intended to imply that it was a useful work, the publication of which had been improperly suppressed, and of which the public ought to have the benefit.

The most convenient and effectual mode of justifying the non-publication of this Expurgatory List in its present state will be to institute a short examination of it, on the same principles as would be applied to the examination of any other publication; and it is believed that the result of such an examination will be to prove that the work which has been thus put forth to the public at a considerable expense, with the implied sanction of the House of Commons, is to a great extent useless for any practical purpose, and in such a state of imperfection as would make its publication discreditable to any ordinary editor.

It should, however, be distinctly stated at the outset of these observations, that they refer mainly to the impropriety of printing and publishing the work, and are not intended to impute any blame to those who framed it. The justice and necessity of making this distinction will be shewn further on; but it is proposed, in the first instance, to examine the work independently of the peculiar circumstances under which it was compiled, with which the public, to whom it is presented without explanation, and consequently with the implied assurance that it is a complete and useful work, have nothing to do.

In examining a publication of this kind, the first question to be asked is, what is its professed object, and what information is it intended to convey? The answer, it is presumed, would be, that it is intended as a book of reference to accompany the Statutes at Large, and that its use is to enable a student, who is desirous of knowing whether any particular enactment is in force or not, to ascertain the fact.

But, on turning to the list, it is immediately apparent, on the one hand, that it contains a large proportion of matter which is of no use whatever for that or any other purpose; and, on the other hand, that for the uses above indicated it is extremely imperfect, and to a certain extent misleading.

First, as to the useless matter. We find in the list a considerable number of acts to which is merely added a statement that they are "local," or a query whether they are "public general acts." This is no more than a statement of their subject-matter, and conveys no information to any one. The whole of these entries are therefore absolutely useless. They are 2468* in number, and fill about fifty folio pages of print, being one-fifth of the whole work.

There is also a considerable number of acts inserted in the list to which is only added a statement that they are obsolete, or a query whether they are not obsolete. This also conveys no new information respecting those acts. Any one with an act before him can judge for himself whether, from its subject-matter, it is not likely to be enforced in the present day; and that, it should be remembered, is the only sense in which any act can be said to be obsolete. If there is any doubt on the point, the omission or insertion of the act in this list will not solve it. These acts, entered as obsolete, or perhaps obsolete, are 436 in number, filling about nine folio pages.

Again: there is a large number of acts inserted in the list to which is only added a statement that they are expired, or a query whether they are not expired. But it is no information to any one to tell him that an act of which the subject-matter is temporary, or which is passed for a fixed time only, is expired. That is apparent on the face of the act, or, (as was observed with respect to obsolete acts), if there is any doubt on the point, the statement that there is a doubt will not help to solve it. What a student wants to know with respect to acts originally temporary is, not whether they have expired, but whether they have since been continued or made perpetual. The acts entered as expired, or perhaps expired, amount to 4287, and occupy about 85 folio pages, being more than one-third of the whole bulk of the work.

It appears, then, in the first place, that out of the 12,515⁴ entries and 248 pages of which this work consists, 7191 entries and 144 pages, or about three-fifths of the whole work, are mere waste of paper and print.

The residue, though by no means without utility, is defective to a most serious extent; and though it may be said, that if a work is useful, it is not just to object that it might have been made more useful with a larger expenditure of money, time, and labour, yet it will be admitted that the public is entitled to expect in every published work, as implied by the act of publication, a certain amount of completeness and fulfilment of its apparent promise; and that, if these be wanting, some discredit must fall upon those who are responsible for causing it to be published.

The parts of this Expurgatory List which now come under consideration are the entries of those acts which have been repealed or superseded by subsequent legislation, with references to the acts by which they are repealed. A chronological list of this kind is undoubtedly useful as a work of reference; but it is hardly necessary to add that its utility must depend in a great measure on the confidence with which it can be used by the public, and that it is not likely that such confidence will be accorded to a work of an evidently incomplete nature.

The imperfections of this list of repealed statutes are—

1. That it includes only those statutes which affect England.
2. That it includes only the acts styled "general," though the distinction between those and others is little more than arbitrary in many cases.
3. That it includes only those acts of which the whole is now repealed, though it is just as important to know whether any given section of an act is repealed or not.
4. That where an act has been repealed by the operation of several acts, there is in many cases no indication of which parts of the repealed act are affected by the several repealing acts mentioned; for instance, a student desirous of knowing whether a particular section of the 23 Geo. 2, c. 26, is in force or not, will find, on turning to this list, that the whole act, in the judgment of the authors, is either expired, or obsolete, or repealed; and if repealed, repealed either by the 14 Geo. 3, c. 91, or by the 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, or by the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27, or by the 1 & 2 Vict. (local), c. 8, or by the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73; but which of these statements refers to the section about which he desires information he is left to find out for himself as well as he can.
5. That in the cases (which frequently occur) of an act being repealed in terms, or superseded, by several acts of different epochs, it appears to have been thought sufficient to name any act by force of which the act under examination may be said to be repealed, though it is evident that it is often important to know when an act was first repealed.

6. That in many instances the references to the repealing acts are so vague as to convey scarcely any information. Thus, in the first page of the list we find it stated that one act is obsolete—"since Wills Act, &c.;" that four others are virtually repealed by "6 Geo. 4, c. 50; 3 & 4 Will. 4, cc. 27, 105; 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, &c.;" and that another is virtually repealed by "15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, and other law amendment acts;" and in the last page we find that three acts are repealed by "Mr. Wilson's Bill," and that another is expired since some act of the 16 & 17 Vict., without naming the chapter.

7. That a "query" is prefixed to a considerable number of the entries, indicating both that no reliance is to be placed on the particular statement, and that the whole work is in an unfinished condition, and intended to undergo a revision which it has not received.

With respect to the accuracy of the entries in this list, no opinion can properly be ventured on without a much more complete examination of it than has hitherto been attempted; but that it does contain some inaccuracies is certain. The following have been observed in the course of some occasional references to the list:—

- (1). The 4 Edw. 4, c. 8, is stated to be revived in part by the 7 Jac. 1, c. 1. This should be 7 Jac. 1, c. 14.
- (2). The act 7 Jac. 1, c. 14, is entered as obsolete, and it is added in a note, that it "escaped the repeal intended for it by 6 Geo. 4, c. 105," by being there erroneously described as of James the Second. But in the repealing act of George IV, though it is true that it is referred to as an act of the seventh year of James II, yet it comes in its proper chronological place between an act of Elizabeth and an act of Charles II, and it is unequivocally identified by a reference to its subject-matter, the repeal being of "so much of an act passed in the seventh year of the reign of King James II as enacts that no person or persons whatsoever shall send English horns unwrought over the sea;" and it is therefore conceived that the terms of the act 6 Geo. 4, c. 105, are fully sufficient to effect the repeal of the act 7 Jac. 1, c. 14, and that the principle of construction suggested in the list is erroneous.
- (3). The Toleration Act of the 1 Will. & M. st. 1, c. 18, is stated to be either obsolete or virtually repealed by the 52 Geo. 3, c. 155. The propriety of this entry is, however, very questionable. The act in question is generally considered to be still in force for some purposes. The act of 52 Geo. 3, c. 155, though no doubt superseding many of its provisions, refers to it in a way which is rather a confirmation than a repeal, and it is referred to as an act still in force by the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 36. Its 18th section contains a general enactment which does not appear to be altogether superseded by the 12th section of the 52 Geo. 3, c. 155; and moreover, as the last-mentioned act expressly excepts Quakers, it would appear that the whole of the act of William and Mary continues in force with respect to them.

* In the joint minute by Messrs. Anstey and Rogers, already referred to, it is stated, (p. 109), that the number of acts in the Expurgatory List is 10,047; but as the list now printed evidently much exceeds that number, it is presumed that the 2468 acts "of a merely local or personal application" were not included in the number of 10,047, though they appear in the list.

The attention of the Profession is invited to the advantages offered by this Office to Solicitors and their Clients, which will be found to be greater than in most other Life Offices.

ADVANTAGES TO THE ASSURED.

1. Four-fifths of the Profits are divided triennially amongst the Assured.

In some Offices the Assured may not be entitled to a Bonus until the expiration of ten years from the time of effecting the Policy, whilst in this Office three years is the utmost limit.

2. At the first division of Profits in May, 1853, a Reversionary Bonus, averaging 454 per cent., was declared on all Participating Policies. In some cases the Bonus exceeded 614 per cent. on the premiums paid.

On reference to the Prospectuses of some of the principal Offices, it will be found that the Bonus on their first division was much less, viz. 294 per cent.

3. The next division of Profits will be declared in May, 1856, when all Policies effected in 1855 will participate.

In most Offices Assurers do not participate in the Profits until after payment of from three to five annual premiums, but in this Office they may participate on payment of a single premium.

ADVANTAGES TO THE PROFESSION.

A Commission of 104 per cent. is allowed on the first year's premium, and 54 per cent. annually afterwards; and, as an additional advantage to persons introducing business, the Shareholders have by the Deed of Settlement given up half of their Profits for the benefit of such persons as extra Commission.

The extra Commission paid in 1853 to persons introducing business was as follows:—

Ordinary Commission paid.	Extra Commission paid.
£75 16 0	£54 12 11

THE JURIST.

LONDON, OCTOBER 27, 1885.

THE most interesting branch of jurisprudence is that which relates to the law of evidence, especially under the new system, beginning in the reign of William IV, by the abolition of objections to the competency of witnesses on the ground of interest or of crime, and proceeding to the later measures for compelling, in most cases, the testimony not only of parties to the suit, but also of their wives. Among the recent illustrations of this system must be ranked the well-known case of Boyle v. Wiseman, (1 Jur., N. S., part 1, pp. 115, 894).

That was an action for a libel published in France in The Univers newspaper. On the occasion of the first trial, a witness for the plaintiff, in order to prove publication, deposed that he saw at Paris, in the hands of the Abbé Cognat, a letter in the handwriting of the defendant; that he asked for the letter to bring it to England, which the Abbé refused, but the witness was prepared to give the contents from memory. The plaintiff's counsel thereupon proposed to give secondary evidence of the contents of the letter, which was supposed to contain an admission by the defendant that he was the author of the libel in question, but it was rejected. The plaintiff's counsel then called the defendant himself as a witness, but his counsel objected to his being examined, on the ground that he might be asked questions tending to criminate him. The judge asked the plaintiff's counsel what questions he intended to ask the witness, which the latter refused to disclose, insisting on his right to put the defendant in the box. The judge ruled that he was not entitled to do so, and thereupon the plaintiff was nonsuited. The Court of Exchequer, however, held that the plaintiff's counsel had a right to insist upon the defendant being sworn, and that if the questions afterwards put to him had a tendency to criminate him, the objection to answer must be taken by the party himself upon oath*. They further held that the improper rejection of the witness was ground for a new trial, and granted one accordingly. With regard to the other and more important question raised upon the facts, namely, whether secondary evidence is receivable of a private document in the possession of a person beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, who refuses to produce it, the Court said that it was one of first impression, but intimated a strong opinion that it is admissible. The principle upon which secondary evidence is admitted or rejected was thus lucidly stated by Parke, B.:—“If you offer inferior evidence without accounting for the absence of the primary, a presumption of law arises that there is something in the original document which makes against you. The law, therefore, requires you to make all reasonable efforts to procure the original; but if you shew that you have exhausted them in vain, and that it is unattainable, you may then give secondary evidence. On this principle secondary evidence is received of the handwriting of an attesting witness, if you have first made reasonable efforts to find him*. Now, surely you can give secondary evidence of a document which, being in a foreign country, cannot be procured by subpoena, provided you use every reasonable effort to get it." The Court, however, were clearly of opinion that this proviso had not been complied with, and that the demand of the document made by a stranger to the cause, who did not even disclose his object in making it, was insufficient for the purpose of letting in secondary evidence.

* See Osborn v. The London Dock Company, (10 Exch. 698; S. C., 1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 93), in which it was held that an objection to answer interrogatories, upon the ground of their criminating tendency, must come upon oath from the party interrogated, and not from his attorney.

Upon the second trial it was proved that the Abbé Cognat refused to attend with the document, or to give it up for the purpose of its being produced at the trial. The witness was then desired by the plaintiff's counsel to state the contents from memory, upon which the defendant's counsel interposed, and handing a document to the witness, asked him if that was the letter which he had seen. The witness answered, that if it was the original, it had been altered in some respects; whereupon the defendant's counsel proposed at once to adduce evidence in order to shew that it was the true original, and ought to be received in evidence, to the exclusion of secondary evidence from the witness. This, however, the judge refused to allow at that stage of the proceedings, saying that the defendant might if he pleased give that document in evidence when he came to his own case. Such evidence, however, was not given, and the jury found for the plaintiff.

Again, the Court of Exchequer held that there had been a miscarriage of justice, and that as all preliminary questions of fact, on which the admissibility of evidence depends, must be decided by the judge, and not by the jury, the judge was bound to decide the collateral question, whether the document was original or not, and reject or receive the secondary evidence accordingly.

It was also held that sufficient evidence had now been given to let in parol proof of the contents of the document, if it had not been produced.

The cause stood for trial a third time at the last assizes, but was settled by arrangement between the parties.

We have thus narrated the legal history of this case, and it will be seen that the following propositions may be deduced from it:—

1. All preliminary questions of fact, on which the admissibility of evidence depends, must be decided by the judge, and not by the jury.

2. Where secondary evidence of the contents of a document is duly tendered, and a document is produced by the other party and alleged to be the original, the judge should decide whether it is the original or not, and if he ascertains it to be the former, he should reject the secondary evidence.

3. In order to render secondary evidence of a private document admissible, it is necessary and sufficient to shew that all reasonable efforts have been made to procure the original.

* It is now no longer necessary to call an attesting witness to a document, unless it is one which the law requires to be attested. (17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 26).

4. Where a private document is in the possession of a person beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, who refuses to produce it after a proper demand, and a disclosure of the object for which the demand is made, secondary evidence is receivable.

5. Objections founded upon the self-criminating tendency of an examination do not affect the competency of the witness, but must come from him after he has been sworn.

6. The improper rejection of a witness is ground for a new trial.

THE TICKET-OF-LEAVE SYSTEM.

THE following letter from Colonel Jebb has appeared in The Times:—

Sir,—The release of convicts on license appears to have caused so much apprehension in the public mind, that, unwilling as I am to intrude upon your columns, I would venture to beg the favour of a small space, in order to afford a few needful explanations on the subject.

I am induced to do this from a sense of duty, not only to the convicts themselves, whose means of obtaining employment have been seriously prejudiced by the adverse opinions which have been expressed, but in the belief that a plain statement, supported by facts, may lead to more just and favourable views.

I am encouraged to hope for this result from a conviction that the want of accurate information has been the cause of the misapprehension which exists.

The act which abolished transportation for terms under fourteen years was passed in 1853. There were in the different convict prisons in England at that time upwards of 6000 convicts under sentences of transportation for seven and ten years. It had previously been determined that no more convicts should be sent to Van Diemen's Land, and it was known that the small colony of Western Australia could only receive a small proportion of them. Hence arose the question what was to be done with them.

It must be remembered that these men had not been sentenced to imprisonment, but to transportation, and that the commutation of the one sentence into the other was no new thing, but had long been a recognised practice. Until within a very recent period almost every convict who received a sentence of seven years' transportation was, as a matter of course, sent to the hulks, whence he was released with a free pardon at the expiration of one-half of his sentence.

In the years from 1843 to 1847 there were released no less than 3450 under such a commutation. Now, the difference between the practice which obtained at that time and the system which has been established for carrying out the provisions of the 13 & 14 Vict. is this—that instead of giving the men a free pardon at the expiration of about half their time, they receive only a revocable pardon, which, in the terms of the act, is called a license, and is popularly designated a ticket of leave.

No one acquainted with the circumstances will contend for a moment that these men should have been kept in prison, as a general rule, during the whole term to which they had been sentenced to transportation. The feeling of Parliament and of the highest authorities of the law on this point is conclusively shewn in the periods of penal servitude set forth in the act as substitutes for the sentences of transportation. For example, the ordinary minimum term of transportation was seven years, which is represented in the new act by a minimum of four years' penal servitude, and so on.

From these considerations it will be apparent, that if the Government had not the means of carrying into effect the sentences which had been passed upon the men referred to, and that they had completed such a period in prison as could, under all circumstances, be fairly considered an equivalent or a commutation of their original sentences, they were justly entitled to their liberty.

After due consideration of the existing regulations, and the hopes and expectations which had been held out of certain remissions of the period of detention in this country as a reward for industry and exemplary conduct, it was determined by the Secretary of State that a convict under sentence of seven years' transportation, whose conduct had been exemplary during the whole period of his confinement, should be eligible for release on license at the expiration of three years; and a convict under sentence of ten years' transportation should, under like conditions, be eligible in the minimum period of four years.

This decision was generally regarded by the convicts with more distaste than if the original sentence had been left to take its course; for in addition to a longer period of imprisonment, they were to remain under the restrictions of a license for the whole term to which they had been transported.

It may be said that the former plan of getting rid of them entirely was better; but it has already been shewn that, under the exigency of the colonies suddenly refusing to receive more, there was no alternative but to release them at home; and the only question, as far as the convicts are concerned, now is, whether it would have been just and proper to have broken faith with them entirely, by subjecting them to imprisonment during a term which they had been led to expect they should pass with a ticket of leave in one of the colonies, or to have released them after such a term of confinement as was a fair commutation of their sentences.

The following statement of the numbers already released on license would, I fear, be calculated to increase the alarm which has been felt, if it did not at the same time tend to induce the belief, if not to prove, that a large proportion of them have, through their own exertions and the benevolent assistance which I thankfully acknowledge they have received, entered upon an honest course of industry:—

Between the 8th October, 1853, and the present date there have been released on license 3629, leaving only about 2000 of the original number now in England to be so released when they become eligible.

As regards sentences of penal servitude, it has been already explained that the terms mentioned in the act being in the nature of a commutation of corresponding terms of transportation, there does not exist the same, nor indeed any, necessity why they should not be as fully carried out as any other sentences of imprisonment.

It is certainly indispensable, in any system of moral discipline, to hold out encouragement to good conduct; and though there may be no boon which can be offered as equivalent to a remission of the period of detention, it will, I trust, yet be possible to find some sufficient inducement to good behaviour and willing industry, the Secretary of State having determined, that, as a general rule, every convict shall serve out the whole period of his sentence of penal servitude.

After the release, therefore, of the remainder of those who were under sentences for the shorter terms of transportation at the time when the act passed, its provisions, in regard to release on license, will be practically almost a dead letter.

In adverting to the conduct of those who have already been released on license, I may regret, in common with others interested in their fate, that so many cases of relapse into crime have occurred; but if there be matter for surprise, it is the very small proportion that have done so. These men are entitled to a fair consideration of the circumstances in which they have been placed. However good may have been the resolutions they may have formed during their confinement, or however much they may have dreaded being again within the grasp of the law, what were they to do if on their discharge every man's hand was against them, and they were unable to find the means of earning an honest livelihood? Many instances have occurred where a relapse into crime has arisen from the great difficulties they have had to encounter in their search after employment.

I have already stated that 3620 men have been released. Of these only 90 licenses, or about 2½ per cent., have been revoked. This, however, does not represent the number who have been convicted of crime.

With a view to obtain information on this point the Secretary of State addressed a circular, dated the 15th February, to the visiting magistrates of all gaols, requesting them to take measures for insuring the transmission to the Home Office of a report of every case of the recommittal of a license-holder to prison, stating the nature of the charge, &c. The total number of convictions up to the 8th August, 1855, was 97, as shewn in a return presented to the House of Lords; and the number of such reports received up to the present date, including the 97 before mentioned, does not exceed 130. Among these are included the licenses revoked.

Though these returns do not probably contain all that might be brought against the holders of licenses as a class, I believe that a more rigid investigation would establish the fact that a far greater number than might have been generally anticipated are doing well for themselves.

With reference to this point the information obtained by the governors and chaplains of prisons concerning the men who have been under their charge has, on the whole, been very favourable. The best data on which they have been enabled to form an opinion have been the applications for the balance of gratuities due to them, made by the men three months after their discharge, which will be admitted to have been the period of their greatest difficulties and trials. In order to obtain this balance it is necessary they should shew, to the satisfaction of the authorities, that they are observing the conditions of their licenses, and are employed. This application is required to be backed by a magistrate, clergyman, or other person on whom reliance can be placed.

The following is a return of the nature of the information received of convicts who have thus applied for the balance of their gratuities from the 30th June, 1854, to the 30th June, 1855:—

Note.—The total number who had left a balance in the hands of the Governors was 960; 270 therefore had not applied at the date of this return, the larger portion of whom had not been discharged the regulated period.

I may add, that hundreds of letters have been received confirmatory of the foregoing statements.

In my report dated the 27th June, 1854, I thus expressed my opinion:—

“When a case of a return to crime on the part of the holder of a license occurs it naturally attracts attention, and the public, who are not generally aware of all the circumstances, are disposed to judge of the rule by the exceptions; but the true view will only be obtained by looking closely to the results as a whole.

“In arguing the question many might be disposed to admit, that if 75 or 80 per cent. of those who are released on order of license do well for themselves, there would be no great cause for alarm. As far as present experience goes, there is reason to hope that a much more favourable result will be realised, and I confess I shall be disappointed if it be otherwise.”

I see no reason to change the opinion expressed at that time; and when it is considered that the annual average of re-committed prisoners to common gaols is between 30 and 40 per cent., and in some prisons in a much higher ratio, I think it may be fairly stated that the corrective discipline and industrial training of the convict prisons has been attended with marked success.

It would be too much to expect of human nature, or of human institutions designed for effecting reformation, that any great proportion of the convicts are reformed in the strict and religious acceptance of the term. It will be enough that they be fairly judged by the standard applied to others.

Had I not already trespassed upon your space at far greater length than I intended, I would have entered into some explanations on the course of discipline to which the convicts are subjected; but I must refer any who are interested in the subject to my printed reports, in which every detail appears.

A consideration of the system or an inspection of the prisons would, I think, lead any one to the conclusion, that years of patient, persevering industry, of regularity, cleanliness, and obedience, daily attendance at chapel, and the zealous efforts of the governors, chaplains, and other officers of the different prisons, coupled with just and considerate treatment, cannot fail to have some good effect on the habits and feelings of the great body of men who have been subjected to it.

I will add, in conclusion, that the experience of all who have the best opportunities of judging will, I am satisfied, coincide with the opinion of the committee of the House of Commons, 1850, as expressed in one of their resolutions:—

“That the committee concurs with some of the most experienced witnesses they have examined in the opinion that a great majority of convicted prisoners are open to the same good motives and good impulses which influence other human beings.”

I am, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

J. JEBB, Colonel,

Chairman of the Directors of Convict Prisons.

To which Mr. Serjeant Adams has sent the following reply:—

Sir,—The name of Colonel Jebb at all times commands respect, and especially so in all that regards prison discipline; but the result of my experience of the working of the ticket-of-leave system is so at variance with his views upon the subject that I trust you will afford me space in your columns for a short analysis of the evidence upon which he seems to found them. He rests his case upon the returns laid before the House of Lords in 1854 and 1855. One of his main arguments is grounded on the fact, that one-half of the gratuity to which a convict is entitled is not payable until after the expiration of three months from the date of his discharge—“a time,” he adds, “which will be admitted to have been the period of his greatest difficulties and trials”—and then only on a certificate of good conduct, and that it rarely occurs that such certificate is not obtained. Now, in the return referred to by him it is stated, that “of 960 convicts released during the year ended the 30th June, 1855, 690 had made application at the end of the stipulated period for the balance of the gratuity, and that 684 of the number produced satisfactory testimonials of their good conduct;” and that “of the 270 who had not applied, the greater portion had not been at large the regulated period.” Now, instead of 960 being the number discharged in that year, the number must have been upwards of 2000, for it appears by two other returns laid before the House in July, 1854, and March, 1855, that 1537 convicts had been discharged in the first nine months of such year, of whom 1513 were entitled to gratuities. It is impossible to place any reliance upon returns so loosely made out; but passing by this difficulty, the returns prove too much, and shew nothing but the facility with which certificates of good conduct are obtained. Upwards of 2000 convicts are discharged: of these upwards of 1700 have received the whole amount of their gratuities, while four only have failed in their applications; and of the remaining 270 the greater portion (and I believe, if the returns could be thoroughly sifted, it would be found that nearly the whole number) have not applied, simply because the time for application has not arrived. Take, for example, the two prisoners tried before me for housebreaking on Monday last: both were cases of recent discharge; both obtained the requisite certificates from clergymen—one of them actually within less than a month of the day on which he committed the robbery of which he has now been convicted. Is it possible more strongly to demonstrate that the certificate is a mere form? Imagine, if you can, 2000 convicts let loose, and 1996 of them immediately becoming honest men!

Colonel Jebb next states, that, “with a view to obtain information as to reconversions of ticket-of-leave men, the Secretary of State addressed a circular, in February last, to the visiting magistrates of all gaols requesting them to take measures for insuring the transmission to the Home Office of a report in every case of the recommittal of a license-holder to prison, stating the nature of the charge, &c.; and that the total number of convictions to the 8th August, 1855, (as appears by a return to the House of Lords), was ninety-seven;” and he infers the well working of the system from the paucity of these convictions. Now, upon examination, this return proves to be more unsatisfactory—I would almost say more delusive—than the last. Unfortunately, it omits to state the gaols from which the returns are made; but it is self-evident, when analysed, that they must be from rural districts, and can relate only to prisoners not previously convicted of serious offences; as, for example, (I quote from the returns), of stealing “a pork pie,” or “a duck,” or “a rabbit,” and the like. Eleven of the ninety-seven convictions are for offences against the Vagrant Act, eleven more for assaults, three for offences against the game laws, one for wilful damage, one for using obscene language, one for desertion from the militia, and fifty-three for common larcenies, leaving only eleven cases of convictions of a heavier character. It is quite idle to suppose that such a return affords the slightest illustration of the real working of a system which brings within its operation some thousands of offenders, and among them all the most hardened and desperate of the criminal population. I find no returns have been made from the Middlesex prisons, and the reason assigned by the governor is, that he does not feel himself warranted to make returns upon suspicion only. I entertain no doubt that the number of ticket-of-leave men who have passed through Coldbath-fields alone greatly exceeds the whole number supposed to have been reconvicted in the whole kingdom. I would also add, that, exercising the utmost diligence, it would be impossible, in the metropolitan or any thickly-populated district, to make any reports, according to the requisitions of that letter, which would even approximate to correctness. It would be necessary, not only that the convicts should always resume their trade in their old haunts, and be imprisoned in the same gaols, but that the warders should remain unchanged, and also possess the rare power of remembering and identifying these ticket-of-leave men after an absence of many years, and when many thousand prisoners annually pass through their gaols. The truth is, that while the police courts, and the courts of quarter sessions, and the assizes are continually producing proofs of "the unmitigated curæ" (to use your own words) of the system as administered, the evidence in its favour is, when sifted, as dust in the balance; and I add, as a concluding proof of the truth of this assertion, the return of the Secretary of State to that part of the order of the House of Lords which called for a return of the "number of convicts with tickets of leave who are known by the authorities to be now in employment, or conducting themselves properly." His emphatic reply was as follows:—"The Secretary of State is not in possession of any sufficient information upon this point to enable him to make the required return."

It was my intention to have added some observations upon the future working of the system, or rather of the ultimate consequences to the community of the present system of secondary punishment—namely, penal servitude; but my letter is, I fear, already unreasonably long.

Your obedient servant,

JOHN ADAMS.

- (4). The 4 Will. & M. c. 2, is entered as either expired, obsolete, or repealed, with a reference to the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, ss. 1, 83, and with a "query" prefixed to the whole. This act is neither expired, obsolete, or repealed. It is a partial repeal of the custom of York as to personalty, with the exception of the cities of York and Chester, and is now in full force, except that the exception as to the city of York has been repealed by the 2 & 3 Ann. c. 5. The 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, (the Wills Act), does not in any way affect this act, and moreover contains only thirty-six sections, so that the reference to sect. 83 is an error.
- (5). The 2 & 3 Ann. c. 5, just mentioned as being a repeal of the exception in the 4 Will. & M. c. 2, so far as relates to the city of York, is stated to be an act about "supply and customs duties," and to be expired or obsolete.
- (6). The 8 Ann. c. 11, (c. 6 of the quarto edition), is said to be expired, or virtually repealed by the 6 Geo. 4, c. 106. It is not, however, a temporary act, nor does it appear to be repealed by the act referred to.
- (7). Of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 43, it is stated that an unsuccessful attempt was made to repeal it by the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 92, s. 26. The reason why that attempt was said to be unsuccessful is, that it is misdescribed as an act "of the fifth year of the reign of King George the Third." This is not accurate; it is referred to as an act of the fifth year of the reign of King George the Fourth; and as the number of the chapter is correctly given, and also the title at full length, it is conceived that the terms of the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 92, are a clear repeal. (See the observations already made as to the 7 Jac. 1, c. 14).

- (8). The 1 Geo. 3, c. 21, is said to be virtually repealed by the 58 Geo. 3, c. 75; and a note is added, that "the repeal of it was intended by the 15 Geo. 3, c. 54, but the error of a date (3 Geo. 3 for 1 Geo. 3) defeated the intention." As this act relates exclusively to Scotland, it ought not to have been inserted in the list at all; but passing over this objection, which is not of much consequence, it is to be observed, first, that the reference in the note to the 15 Geo. 3, c. 54, is an error—it should be 13 Geo. 3; secondly, that the principle of construction assumed in the note is erroneous, as in the two other cases already mentioned, the title of the act being given at full length; and, thirdly, that the 58 Geo. 3, c. 75, which inflicts penalties on buying game only, cannot be said to be a repeal of an act which inflicts penalties on killing or selling game, which the 1 Geo. 3, c. 21, does. Moreover, the terms used in the 58 Geo. 3, c. 75, raise a doubt whether it extends to Scotland at all.

It must, however, be admitted, that as no systematic examination of the list has been attempted, and as the instances in which any of the entries have been tested have been but few, sufficient materials have not been collected to justify any inference as to the average accuracy of the whole work.

At the commencement of this paper it was observed, that it was the act of printing and publishing the list in question that was open to so much objection, and that there was no intention of imputing blame to those who compiled it. The following short account of the circumstances under which the list was prepared will shew the necessity and justice of making this distinction.

Soon after the Statute-law Board of 1853 first met, Messrs. Anstey and Rogers proposed, that among other works for the improvement of the statute law there should be passed through Parliament a general repealing act of all the statutes which have ceased to be in force, for the purpose of clearing the Statute-book of unnecessary matter. At a later period I thought it my duty as chief commissioner to advise the Lord Chancellor to abandon the project of passing such an act, (Second Report of the late Board, 1854); but when it was first proposed, seeing that Messrs. Anstey and Rogers were anxious to prepare such a work, and thinking that it would be a useful one for reference, at any rate, whether made the foundation of a general act or not, I authorised them to proceed with it; and accordingly those gentlemen commenced their examination of the statutes, and in the short space of three months completed the list, which has now been printed by the direction of the House of Commons.

For reasons into which it is not necessary to enter, it was deemed advisable that this list should include only the "public general acts" relating to England, and only those acts of which the whole was no longer in force; and Messrs. Anstey and Rogers were instructed to prepare their list on that footing.

It was subject to these instructions, and with reference to, and for the purposes of, their proposal to have a general declaratory act to "clear the Statute-book" repealing all acts which are not now wanted, whether already repealed or not, (or, if not that, at least to have a new edition of the statutes, omitting all acts not now wanted), that Messrs. Anstey and Rogers entered on their task; and if these facts are borne in mind, it will be perceived that most of the reasons which have been adduced to shew that the work as now published is to a great extent useless, and at best very defective, imply no reproach to those gentlemen.

In the first place, the list in its present form is merely a first draft, requiring, and intended to receive, a complete revision before being put forth as fit for use. This they distinctly announced in their joint minute of the 26th July, 1853, (printed in the First Report of the late Statute-law Board). "It is obvious," they said, "that so extensive a list, prepared in less than three months, will require a careful revision by a fresh hand." This fact at once relieves them from any blame in respect of many of the objections urged against the list. Their instructions being to confine themselves to "public general" acts, it was natural and proper that when dealing with the period before the modern division of "general" and "local and personal" acts into distinct series, they should notice, for the purpose of obtaining further directions, all those acts which would now probably be termed local or personal acts; though to print these queries in a list professing to be a work of reference for general use was evidently useless. The same consideration is a sufficient excuse for the numerous entries to which a "query," or other expression of uncertainty, is attached; and also makes it unjust to find fault even with such positive inaccuracies as may be detected in a work executed in so short a time, and which certainly shews, generally speaking, a remarkably extensive acquaintance with the contents of the Statute-book.

These considerations also justify the insertion of the expired and obsolete statutes, which (as has been shewn) it was useless to insert in a work of reference. The framers of the list conceived that they were preparing for a particular purpose, quite different from that to which it has now been applied, a list of all the acts which for any reason are defunct, including those which, if not hitherto distinctly repealed, ought to be repealed.

So with regard to the objection that the list does not always indicate, in the case of repealed acts, the period when they were first repealed, the above-mentioned circumstances exonerate the framers of the list. For their purpose it was only necessary to make it apparent that the act in question had ceased to be in force somehow, so as to justify its insertion in the list.

The foregoing comments will, I hope, have shewn that the non-publication of this list in its present form by the late Board, or by the present Commission, was no unfair suppression, but the exercise of a proper discretion; and that if either of those Boards had caused it to be published, they would have been deservedly exposed to the charge of having wasted a considerable amount of public money in producing a work so crude and so imperfect as to justify the public in refusing to place any confidence in their future labours. What indeed could be said in defence of the publication of a work of which the authors themselves (in their joint minute already quoted) said, "it is obvious that so extensive a list, prepared in less than three months, will require a careful revision by a fresh hand;" and in a subsequent passage, "we have already remarked that the Expurgatory List is still under revision?" If it be objected that such revision and completion ought to have been effected, I need only remind the Board that a proposal for doing so was submitted to them by me on the 13th December last, and that although they determined to abandon the attempt for the present, that determination was not arrived at without sufficient reasons, and was indeed partly founded on considerations suggested to them with candour by Mr.

With respect to the scheme for a general declaratory repealing act, originally contemplated by Messrs. Anstey and Rogers, and now revived by the resolutions of which Mr. Locke King has given notice, the following are the reasons which in the Second Report of the late Board (1854) were adduced by me against its adoption:—

"There is another view connected with the revision of the statutes which I think it right to notice, as it has been, and I believe still is, entertained by two of my colleagues, and probably is entertained by many other persons, namely, that it is the duty of Parliament, if not itself to republish all those acts which are to remain in force, at least to give assistance to any editor who now wishes to make a new edition of the living law, by passing a comprehensive statute, enumerating every one of the laws already repealed, expired, or otherwise not in force, and once more declaring or enacting them to be repealed. With every respect for those who hold this opinion, I must say that I think an act of this description is quite out of the question, and that for many reasons, some of principle and others practical; they are briefly these:—1. That to ask the Legislature to repeal what is not the law at all is futile, and asking it to do what is no part of its office. 2. That if passed, such an act would not, after all, be of much practical use, and the points in which it would be most useful would be better provided for in the course of consolidation, as I shall endeavour to shew further on. 3. That the benefit (which has been much insisted on) of having a chronological list of all the statutes not in force would only endure for a single session, for the repeals of the next session would not appear in their chronological places. 4. A very great number of the defunct acts of Parliament are of such a nature that it is not proper to declare either that they are repealed or expired; the only proper course is to let them alone. Such are all acts which are the foundations of rights or titles to which it has long ceased to be necessary to appeal, but which nevertheless cannot be declared repealed, which would be equivalent (in many cases) to enacting the contrary. The proposed act would therefore, in a great degree, fail in its object, for it would necessarily leave untouched a vast mass of statutes which no editor would think it necessary to reprint, but which nevertheless are not so absolutely annulled that the Legislature itself may declare them to be for all purposes extinct, as if they had never been. It may be observed that it is not reasonable or natural to repeal any act of a temporary nature, unless it is intended to shorten the original term fixed for its duration; or to repeal any of those acts which, though not expressly limited as to duration, were passed to effect an end which has been effected, unless it is intended to reverse what has been done under them. There is an essential difference between the repeal and the expiration of an act. A repeal implies a change; the expiration of a temporary enactment is no change, but belongs to its original condition. It is therefore absolutely incorrect in principle to repeal an expired act; it is also nugatory, for the repeal can only mean that the act is not to be in force if the conditions of its existence have terminated—which is a truism, and no assistance to any one; or else that it is not to be in force whether the conditions of its existence have terminated or not—which is not what is intended. It will be said that the proposed general clearing statute is not a repeal, but only a declaration by the Legislature that the acts have expired. But what can that mean? The statute must have some legislative force, or none. If none, what is the use of it? If any, it must be a repeal. If, however, there be a doubt as to whe-

"These objections are not merely verbal distinctions—they are founded on the nature of things. The difference between a permanent and a temporary or transitory act is fundamental, and it would be singular if the application to the one of a treatment only proper to the other had not a practically mischievous effect. In fact, to repeal an act which is defunct only because it has effected its object would produce an effect exactly the contrary of what is intended. Suppose an act authorising trustees to purchase an estate; they purchase the estate accordingly, and the act is defunct—there is nothing more for it to do. But if we now repeal that act, we repeal the authority given to the trustees, and their purchase becomes a breach of trust. The case of all transitory acts is, in fact, the same—the effect of a repeal, when strictly considered, is not to get rid of them, but to invalidate everything that has been done under them. Tithe commutations, inclosures, enfranchisements of copyholds, sales and exchanges of estates, divorces, and many other whole classes which will readily suggest themselves, fall within the scope of the foregoing observations. An act declaring that the acts under which they were effected are repealed would be equivalent to a declaration that they were illegally made, and void: the tithes would be restored, the inclosures would become common land, the enfranchised property would become copyhold again, and so on. No doubt the repealing act could be so worded as not to produce such effects as those last mentioned; but it could only be by confining it to a declaration that the acts are not in force, except so far as they are wanted, which would make it nugatory; for to declare that the repeal only applies to the future would not be sufficient, the acts now in question being the foundation of continuing rights.

"Permanent acts are repealed because it is intended that they shall no longer be the law of the land as to present and future transactions; and if there are any permanent acts about which there may be a doubt whether they have been repealed already, there can be no harm in repealing them over again, for still that is only a declaration that they shall not henceforth be the law, whether they were so before or not. It will readily be seen that the case of expired and defunct acts is entirely different, and that these considerations do not touch them at all.

"It appears, therefore, that so far from its being any part of the duty of a Legislature to pass a declaratory statute as to expired and defunct acts, such a measure would at best be nugatory, and perhaps mischievous.

"Finally, from the manuscript list of the defunct statutes which has been already prepared by Messrs. Anstey and Rogers, which would form the basis of any such declaratory act as is proposed, it would appear, that even taking the public acts only, and those relating to (or including) England only, and those which are wholly repealed and expired only, (though such limitations would deprive the measure of much of its value), the declaratory statute would contain upwards of ten thousand entries; and if extended (as it ought to be if made at all) to all repealed or unexpired enactments whatsoever, and not merely to whole statutes, would probably contain not far from twenty thousand entries. Those who best know the difficulty of passing an ordinary bill through Parliament will be best able to judge of the possibility of ever passing such a statute without an infinitely stronger case for its necessity than would be felt or could be urged."

To these reasons I need only add, that this proposal, like several others which have been made, appears to me to be founded on an entirely mistaken view of the nature of the statute law of England. The Statute-book is not, and does not profess to be, a code of the actual law now in force, but is an historical collection of the alterations which have been made in the law during the last six centuries, and there is no such thing possible as "clearing the Statute-book of unnecessary matter."

The same address in which the Expurgatory List was moved for included a motion for another return, "a copy of a Digest of the Poor Laws, prepared by Mr. Coode, late Commissioner of Statute Law," which, in the notice of his intended motion given by Mr. Locke King on the 12th December, 1854, was further described as a digest, "of which an imperfect copy was stated by Mr. Commissioner Ker to have been laid by the Lord Chancellor on the table of the House of Lords, and which he certified to be a very valuable specimen of a digest of the existing statutes;" and I take this opportunity of giving a short explanation of the nature of that work, and of the reasons which prevented its being printed (as was originally proposed) in the reports of the late Board.

The Digest of the Poor Laws in question was not originally prepared by Mr. Coode as one of the Commissioners of Statute Law. It was a work on which he had been engaged for many years previously, and which he had offered to the Poor-law Board, with a statement that it was then "quite ready for the press," on the 2nd April, 1852, (see the correspondence on the subject, which has been printed in the House of Commons' Papers, 1852, No. 244); and Mr. Coode brought a printed (but unrevised) copy of it to the Lord Chancellor on the first meeting of the late Board, at the end of March, 1853. I understood that he had caused it to be set up in type at the Queen's printers, at his own risk, in the hope of getting it ultimately adopted by the Poor-law Board or the Treasury.

The work being thus already in existence, and requiring, as I then understood from Mr. Coode, only what is commonly implied by "revision of the press," I considered that it would be useful to print it with the First Report of the Board, as a specimen of an elaborate mode of digesting the law on a somewhat peculiar principle; and for that purpose Mr. Coode distinctly undertook to revise and complete it in time for the First Report, which, as Mr. Coode was well aware, the Lord Chancellor was very desirous to have published before the end of the session of 1853.

not now wanted), that Messrs. Anstey and Rogers entered on their task; and if these facts are borne in mind, it will be perceived that most of the reasons which have been adduced to shew that the work as now published is to a great extent useless, and at best very defective, imply no reproach to those gentlemen.

These considerations also justify the insertion of the expired and obsolete statutes, which (as has been shewn) it was useless to insert in a work of reference. Tithe commutations, inclosures, enfranchisements of copyholds, sales and exchanges of estates, divorces, and many other whole classes which will readily suggest themselves, fall within the scope of the foregoing observations. An act declaring that the acts under which they were effected are repealed would be equivalent to a declaration that they were illegally made, and void: the tithes would be restored, the inclosures would become common land, the enfranchised property would become copyhold again, and so on. No doubt the repealing act could be so worded as not to produce such effects as those last mentioned; but it could only be by confining it to a declaration that the acts are not in force, except so far as they are wanted, which would make it nugatory; for to declare that the repeal only applies to the future would not be sufficient, the acts now in question being the foundation of continuing rights.

"Permanent acts are repealed because it is intended that they shall no longer be the law of the land as to present and future transactions; and if there are any permanent acts about which there may be a doubt whether they have been repealed already, there can be no harm in repealing them over again, for still that is only a declaration that they shall not henceforth be the law, whether they were so before or not. It will readily be seen that the case of expired and defunct acts is entirely different, and that these considerations do not touch them at all.

"It appears, therefore, that so far from its being any part of the duty of a Legislature to pass a declaratory statute as to expired and defunct acts, such a measure would at best be nugatory, and perhaps mischievous.

"Finally, from the manuscript list of the defunct statutes which has been already prepared by Messrs. Anstey and Rogers, which would form the basis of any such declaratory act as is proposed, it would appear, that even taking the public acts only, and those relating to (or including) England only, and those which are wholly repealed and expired only, (though such limitations would deprive the measure of much of its value), the declaratory statute would contain upwards of ten thousand entries; and if extended (as it ought to be if made at all) to all repealed or unexpired enactments whatsoever, and not merely to whole statutes, would probably contain not far from twenty thousand entries. Those who best know the difficulty of passing an ordinary bill through Parliament will be best able to judge of the possibility of ever passing such a statute without an infinitely stronger case for its necessity than would be felt or could be urged."

To these reasons I need only add, that this proposal, like several others which have been made, appears to me to be founded on an entirely mistaken view of the nature of the statute law of England. The Statute-book is not, and does not profess to be, a code of the actual law now in force, but is an historical collection of the alterations which have been made in the law during the last six centuries, and there is no such thing possible as "clearing the Statute-book of unnecessary matter."

The same address in which the Expurgatory List was moved for included a motion for another return, "a copy of a Digest of the Poor Laws, prepared by Mr. Coode, late Commissioner of Statute Law," which, in the notice of his intended motion given by Mr. Locke King on the 12th December, 1854, was further described as a digest, "of which an imperfect copy was stated by Mr. Commissioner Ker to have been laid by the Lord Chancellor on the table of the House of Lords, and which he certified to be a very valuable specimen of a digest of the existing statutes;" and I take this opportunity of giving a short explanation of the nature of that work, and of the reasons which prevented its being printed (as was originally proposed) in the reports of the late Board.

The Digest of the Poor Laws in question was not originally prepared by Mr. Coode as one of the Commissioners of Statute Law. It was a work on which he had been engaged for many years previously, and which he had offered to the Poor-law Board, with a statement that it was then "quite ready for the press," on the 2nd April, 1852, (see the correspondence on the subject, which has been printed in the House of Commons' Papers, 1852, No. 244); and Mr. Coode brought a printed (but unrevised) copy of it to the Lord Chancellor on the first meeting of the late Board, at the end of March, 1853. I understood that he had caused it to be set up in type at the Queen's printers, at his own risk, in the hope of getting it ultimately adopted by the Poor-law Board or the Treasury.

The work being thus already in existence, and requiring, as I then understood from Mr. Coode, only what is commonly implied by "revision of the press," I considered that it would be useful to print it with the First Report of the Board, as a specimen of an elaborate mode of digesting the law on a somewhat peculiar principle; and for that purpose Mr. Coode distinctly undertook to revise and complete it in time for the First Report, which, as Mr. Coode was well aware, the Lord Chancellor was very desirous to have published before the end of the session of 1853.

not now wanted), that Messrs. Anstey and Rogers entered on their task; and if these facts are borne in mind, it will be perceived that most of the reasons which have been adduced to shew that the work as now published is to a great extent useless, and at best very defective, imply no reproach to those gentlemen.

In the first place, the list in its present form is merely a first draft, requiring, and intended to receive, a complete revision before being put forth as fit for use. This they distinctly announced in their joint minute of the 25th July, 1853, (printed in the First Report of the late Statute-law Board). "It is obvious," they said, "that so extensive a list, prepared in less than three months, will require a careful revision by a fresh hand." This fact at once relieves them from any blame in respect of many of the objections urged against the list. Their instructions being to confine themselves to "public general" acts, it was natural and proper that when dealing with the period before the modern division of "general" and "local and personal" acts into distinct series, they should notice, for the purpose of obtaining further directions, all those acts which would now probably be termed local or personal acts; though to print these queries in a list professing to be a work of reference for general use was evidently useless. The same consideration is a sufficient excuse for the numerous entries to which a "query," or other expression of uncertainty, is attached; and also makes it unjust to find fault even with such positive inaccuracies as may be detected in a work executed in so short a time, and which certainly shews, generally speaking, a remarkably extensive acquaintance with the contents of the Statute-book.

These considerations also justify the insertion of the expired and obsolete statutes, which (as has been shewn) it was useless to insert in a work of reference. The framers of the list conceived that they were preparing for a particular purpose, quite different from that to which it has now been applied, a list of all the acts which for any reason are defunct, including those which, if not hitherto distinctly repealed, ought to be repealed.

So with regard to the objection that the list does not always indicate, in the case of repealed acts, the period when they were first repealed, the above-mentioned circumstances exonerate the framers of the list. For their purpose it was only necessary to make it apparent that the act in question had ceased to be in force somehow, so as to justify its insertion in the list.

The foregoing comments will, I hope, have shewn that the non-publication of this list in its present form by the late Board, or by the present Commission, was no unfair suppression, but the exercise of a proper discretion; and that if either of those Boards had caused it to be published, they would have been deservedly exposed to the charge of having wasted a considerable amount of public money in producing a work so crude and so imperfect as to justify the public in refusing to place any confidence in their future labours. What indeed could be said in defence of the publication of a work of which the authors themselves (in their joint minute already quoted) said, "it is obvious that so extensive a list, prepared in less than three months, will require a careful revision by a fresh hand;" and in a subsequent passage, "we have already remarked that the Expurgatory List is still under revision?" If it be objected that such revision and completion ought to have been effected, I need only remind the Board that a proposal for doing so was submitted to them by me on the 13th December last, and that although they determined to abandon the attempt for the present, that determination was not arrived at without sufficient reasons, and was indeed partly founded on considerations suggested to them with candour by Mr.

With respect to the scheme for a general declaratory repealing act, originally contemplated by Messrs. Anstey and Rogers, and now revived by the resolutions of which Mr. Locke King has given notice, the following are the reasons which in the Second Report of the late Board (1854) were adduced by me against its adoption:—

"There is another view connected with the revision of the statutes which I think it right to notice, as it has been, and I believe still is, entertained by two of my colleagues, and probably is entertained by many other persons, namely, that it is the duty of Parliament, if not itself to republish all those acts which are to remain in force, at least to give assistance to any editor who now wishes to make a new edition of the living law, by passing a comprehensive statute, enumerating every one of the laws already repealed, expired, or otherwise not in force, and once more declaring or enacting them to be repealed. With every respect for those who hold this opinion, I must say that I think an act of this description is quite out of the question, and that for many reasons, some of principle and others practical; they are briefly these:—1. That to ask the Legislature to repeal what is not the law at all is futile, and asking it to do what is no part of its office. 2. That if passed, such an act would not, after all, be of much practical use, and the points in which it would be most useful would be better provided for in the course of consolidation, as I shall endeavour to shew further on. 3. That the benefit (which has been much insisted on) of having a chronological list of all the statutes not in force would only endure for a single session, for the repeals of the next session would not appear in their chronological places. 4. A very great number of the defunct acts of Parliament are of such a nature that it is not proper to declare either that they are repealed or expired; the only proper course is to let them alone. Such are all acts which are the foundations of rights or titles to which it has long ceased to be necessary to appeal, but which nevertheless cannot be declared repealed, which would be equivalent (in many cases) to enacting the contrary. The proposed act would therefore, in a great degree, fail in its object, for it would necessarily leave untouched a vast mass of statutes which no editor would think it necessary to reprint, but which nevertheless are not so absolutely annulled that the Legislature itself may declare them to be for all purposes extinct, as if they had never been. It may be observed that it is not reasonable or natural to repeal any act of a temporary nature, unless it is intended to shorten the original term fixed for its duration; or to repeal any of those acts which, though not expressly limited as to duration, were passed to effect an end which has been effected, unless it is intended to reverse what has been done under them. There is an essential difference between the repeal and the expiration of an act. A repeal implies a change; the expiration of a temporary enactment is no change, but belongs to its original condition. It is therefore absolutely incorrect in principle to repeal an expired act; it is also nugatory, for the repeal can only mean that the act is not to be in force if the conditions of its existence have terminated—which is a truism, and no assistance to any one; or else that it is not to be in force whether the conditions of its existence have terminated or not—which is not what is intended. It will be said that the proposed general clearing statute is not a repeal, but only a declaration by the Legislature that the acts have expired. But what can that mean? The statute must have some legislative force, or none. If none, what is the use of it? If any, it must be a repeal. If, however, there be a doubt as to whe-

"These objections are not merely verbal distinctions—they are founded on the nature of things. The difference between a permanent and a temporary or transitory act is fundamental, and it would be singular if the application to the one of a treatment only proper to the other had not a practically mischievous effect. In fact, to repeal an act which is defunct only because it has effected its object would produce an effect exactly the contrary of what is intended. Suppose an act authorising trustees to purchase an estate; they purchase the estate accordingly, and the act is defunct—there is nothing more for it to do. But if we now repeal that act, we repeal the authority given to the trustees, and their purchase becomes a breach of trust. The case of all transitory acts is, in fact, the same—the effect of a repeal, when strictly considered, is not to get rid of them, but to invalidate everything that has been done under them. Tithe commutations, inclosures, enfranchisements of copyholds, sales and exchanges of estates, divorces, and many other whole classes which will readily suggest themselves, fall within the scope of the foregoing observations. An act declaring that the acts under which they were effected are repealed would be equivalent to a declaration that they were illegally made, and void: the tithes would be restored, the inclosures would become common land, the enfranchised property would become copyhold again, and so on. No doubt the repealing act could be so worded as not to produce such effects as those last mentioned; but it could only be by confining it to a declaration that the acts are not in force, except so far as they are wanted, which would make it nugatory; for to declare that the repeal only applies to the future would not be sufficient, the acts now in question being the foundation of continuing rights.

"Permanent acts are repealed because it is intended that they shall no longer be the law of the land as to present and future transactions; and if there are any permanent acts about which there may be a doubt whether they have been repealed already, there can be no harm in repealing them over again, for still that is only a declaration that they shall not henceforth be the law, whether they were so before or not. It will readily be seen that the case of expired and defunct acts is entirely different, and that these considerations do not touch them at all.

"It appears, therefore, that so far from its being any part of the duty of a Legislature to pass a declaratory statute as to expired and defunct acts, such a measure would at best be nugatory, and perhaps mischievous.

"Finally, from the manuscript list of the defunct statutes which has been already prepared by Messrs. Those who best know the difficulty of passing an ordinary bill through Parliament will be best able to judge of the possibility of ever passing such a statute without an infinitely stronger case for its necessity than would be felt or could be urged."

To these reasons I need only add, that this proposal, like several others which have been made, appears to me to be founded on an entirely mistaken view of the nature of the statute law of England. The Statute-book is not, and does not profess to be, a code of the actual law now

This they distinctly announced in their joint minute of the 25th July, 1853, (printed in the First Report of the late Statute-law Board). "It is obvious," they said, "that so extensive a list, prepared in less than three months, will require a careful revision by a fresh hand." This fact at once relieves them from any blame in respect of many of the objections urged against the list. Their instructions being to confine themselves to "public general" acts, it was natural and proper that when dealing with the period before the modern division of "general" and "local and personal" acts into distinct series, they should notice, for the purpose of obtaining further directions, all those acts which would now probably be termed local or personal acts; though to print these queries in a list professing to be a work of reference for general use was evidently useless. The same consideration is a sufficient excuse for the numerous entries to which a "query," or other expression of uncertainty, is attached; and also makes it unjust to find fault even with such positive inaccuracies as may be detected in a work executed in so short a time, and which certainly shews, generally speaking, a remarkably extensive acquaintance with the contents of the Statute-book.

These considerations also justify the insertion of the expired and obsolete statutes, which (as has been shewn) it was useless to insert in a work of reference. The framers of the list conceived that they were preparing for a particular purpose, quite different from that to which it has now been applied, a list of all the acts which for any reason are defunct, including those which, if not hitherto distinctly repealed, ought to be repealed.

So with regard to the objection that the list does not always indicate, in the case of repealed acts, the period when they were first repealed, the above-mentioned circumstances exonerate the framers of the list. For their purpose it was only necessary to make it apparent that the act in question had ceased to be in force somehow, so as to justify its insertion in the list.

The foregoing comments will, I hope, have shewn that the non-publication of this list in its present form by the late Board, or by the present Commission, was no unfair suppression, but the exercise of a proper discretion; and that if either of those Boards had caused it to be published, they would have been deservedly exposed to the charge of having wasted a considerable amount of public money in producing a work so crude and so imperfect as to justify the public in refusing to place any confidence in their future labours. What indeed could be said in defence of the publication of a work of which the authors themselves (in their joint minute already quoted) said, "it is obvious that so extensive a list, prepared in less than three months, will require a careful revision by a fresh hand;" and in a subsequent passage, "we have already remarked that the Expurgatory List is still under revision?" If it be objected that such revision and completion ought to have been effected, I need only remind the Board that a proposal for doing so was submitted to them by me on the 13th December last, and that although they determined to abandon the attempt for the present, that determination was not arrived at without sufficient reasons, and was indeed partly founded on considerations suggested to them with candour by Mr.

With respect to the scheme for a general declaratory repealing act, originally contemplated by Messrs. Anstey and Rogers, and now revived by the resolutions of which Mr. Locko King has given notice, the following are the reasons which in the Second Report of the late Board (1854) were adduced by me against its adoption:—

"There is another view connected with the revision of the statutes which I think it right to notice, as it has been, and I believe still is, entertained by two of my colleagues, and probably is entertained by many other persons, namely, that it is the duty of Parliament, if not itself to republish all those acts which are to remain in force, at least to give assistance to any editor who now wishes to make a new edition of the living law, by passing a comprehensive statute, enumerating every one of the laws already repealed, expired, or otherwise not in force, and once more declaring or enacting them to be repealed. With every respect for those who hold this opinion, I must say that I think an act of this description is quite out of the question, and that for many reasons, some of principle and others practical; they are briefly these:—1. That to ask the Legislature to repeal what is not the law at all is futile, and asking it to do what is no part of its office. 2. That if passed, such an act would not, after all, be of much practical use, and the points in which it would be most useful would be better provided for in the course of consolidation, as I shall endeavour to shew further on. 3. That the benefit (which has been much insisted on) of having a chronological list of all the statutes not in force would only endure for a single session, for the repeals of the next session would not appear in their chronological places. 4. A very great number of the defunct acts of Parliament are of such a nature that it is not proper to declare either that they are repealed or expired; the only proper course is to let them alone. Such are all acts which are the foundations of rights or titles to which it has long ceased to be necessary to appeal, but which nevertheless cannot be declared repealed, which would be equivalent (in many cases) to enacting the contrary. The proposed act would therefore, in a great degree, fail in its object, for it would necessarily leave untouched a vast mass of statutes which no editor would think it necessary to reprint, but which nevertheless are not so absolutely annulled that the Legislature itself may declare them to be for all purposes extinct, as if they had never been. It may be observed that it is not reasonable or natural to repeal any act of a temporary nature, unless it is intended to shorten the original term fixed for its duration; or to repeal any of those acts which, though not expressly limited as to duration, were passed to effect an end which has been effected, unless it is intended to reverse what has been done under them. There is an essential difference between the repeal and the expiration of an act. A repeal implies a change; the expiration of a temporary enactment is no change, but belongs to its original condition. It is therefore absolutely incorrect in principle to repeal an expired act; it is also nugatory, for the repeal can only mean that the act is not to be in force if the conditions of its existence have terminated—which is a truism, and no assistance to any one; or else that it is not to be in force whether the conditions of its existence have terminated or not—which is not what is intended. It will be said that the proposed general clearing statute is not a repeal, but only a declaration by the Legislature that the acts have expired. But what can that mean? The statute must have some legislative force, or none. If none, what is the use of it? If any, it must be a repeal. If, however, there be a doubt as to whe-

"These objections are not merely verbal distinctions—they are founded on the nature of things. The difference between a permanent and a temporary or transitory act is fundamental, and it would be singular if the application to the one of a treatment only proper to the other had not a practically mischievous effect. In fact, to repeal an act which is defunct only because it has effected its object would produce an effect exactly the contrary of what is intended. Suppose an act authorising trustees to purchase an estate; they purchase the estate accordingly, and the act is defunct—there is nothing more for it to do. But if we now repeal that act, we repeal the authority given to the trustees, and their purchase becomes a breach of trust. The case of all transitory acts is, in fact, the same—the effect of a repeal, when strictly considered, is not to get rid of them, but to invalidate everything that has been done under them. Tithe commutations, inclosures, enfranchisements of copyholds, sales and exchanges of estates, divorces, and many other whole classes which will readily suggest themselves, fall within the scope of the foregoing observations. An act declaring that the acts under which they were effected are repealed would be equivalent to a declaration that they were illegally made, and void: the tithes would be restored, the inclosures would become common land, the enfranchised property would become copyhold again, and so on. No doubt the repealing act could be so worded as not to produce such effects as those last mentioned; but it could only be by confining it to a declaration that the acts are not in force, except so far as they are wanted, which would make it nugatory; for to declare that the repeal only applies to the future would not be sufficient, the acts now in question being the foundation of continuing rights.

"Permanent acts are repealed because it is intended that they shall no longer be the law of the land as to present and future transactions; and if there are any permanent acts about which there may be a doubt whether they have been repealed already, there can be no harm in repealing them over again, for still that is only a declaration that they shall not henceforth be the law, whether they were so before or not. It will readily be seen that the case of expired and defunct acts is entirely different, and that these considerations do not touch them at all.

"It appears, therefore, that so far from its being any part of the duty of a Legislature to pass a declaratory statute as to expired and defunct acts, such a measure would at best be nugatory, and perhaps mischievous.

"Finally, from the manuscript list of the defunct statutes which has been already prepared by Messrs. Anstey and Rogers, which would form the basis of any such declaratory act as is proposed, it would appear, that even taking the public acts only, and those relating to (or including) England only, and those which are wholly repealed and expired only, (though such limitations would deprive the measure of much of its value), the declaratory statute would contain upwards of ten thousand entries; and if extended (as it ought to be if made at all) to all repealed or unexpired enactments whatsoever, and not merely to whole statutes, would probably contain not far from twenty thousand entries. Those who best know the difficulty of passing an ordinary bill through Parliament will be best able to judge of the possibility of ever passing such a statute without an infinitely stronger case for its necessity than would be felt or could be urged."

To these reasons I need only add, that this proposal, like several others which have been made, appears to me to be founded on an entirely mistaken view of the nature of the statute law of England. The Statute-book is not, and does not profess to be, a code of the actual law now in force, but is an historical collection of the alterations which have been made in the law during the last six centuries, and there is no such thing possible as "clearing the Statute-book of unnecessary matter."

The same address in which the Expurgatory List was moved for included a motion for another return, "a copy of a Digest of the Poor Laws, prepared by Mr. Coode, late Commissioner of Statute Law," which, in the notice of his intended motion given by Mr. Locke King on the 12th December, 1854, was further described as a digest, "of which an imperfect copy was stated by Mr. Commissioner Ker to have been laid by the Lord Chancellor on the table of the House of Lords, and which he certified to be a very valuable specimen of a digest of the existing statutes;" and I take this opportunity of giving a short explanation of the nature of that work, and of the reasons which prevented its being printed (as was originally proposed) in the reports of the late Board.

The Digest of the Poor Laws in question was not originally prepared by Mr. Coode as one of the Commissioners of Statute Law. It was a work on which he had been engaged for many years previously, and which he had offered to the Poor-law Board, with a statement that it was then "quite ready for the press," on the 2nd April, 1852, (see the correspondence on the subject, which has been printed in the House of Commons' Papers, 1852, No. 244); and Mr. Coode brought a printed (but unrevised) copy of it to the Lord Chancellor on the first meeting of the late Board, at the end of March, 1853. I understood that he had caused it to be set up in type at the Queen's printers, at his own risk, in the hope of getting it ultimately adopted by the Poor-law Board or the Treasury.

The work being thus already in existence, and requiring, as I then understood from Mr. Coode, only what is commonly implied by "revision of the press," I considered that it would be useful to print it with the First Report of the Board, as a specimen of an elaborate mode of digesting the law on a somewhat peculiar principle; and for that purpose Mr. Coode distinctly undertook to revise and complete it in time for the First Report, which, as Mr. Coode was well aware, the Lord Chancellor was very desirous to have published before the end of the session of 1853.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 3, 1855.

OUR attention has been directed by the recent case of Sudler v. Henlock (1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 677; 24 L. J., Q. B., 138) to the doctrine of respondent superior in cases where, through the negligence of persons employed either as servants or contractors, an injury has resulted to third parties. We propose, therefore, to review some of the cases which illustrate this doctrine, and to point out the principle by which they are governed. In Sudler v. Henlock the defendant had employed a person of the name of Pearson to inspect and clear out for him a drain which ran under the public road, and had paid him 5s. for the job. Pearson, in order effectually to clear out the drain, had broken up the soil of the highway; and it was alleged, that in consequence of the negligent manner in which he had filled it up again, the plaintiff's horse was thrown down, and his knees broken. It appeared that the defendant had never employed Pearson on any other occasion, and that he was a person well skilled in cleaning drains. The defendant did not personally interfere in the work, nor did he in any way direct in what manner the drain should be cleared out. The plaintiff had a verdict in his favour, and leave was reserved to the defendant to move to enter a nonsuit or a verdict, in case the Court should be of opinion that the defendant was not liable for the acts of Pearson.

"The real question," said Lord Campbell, C. J., in giving judgment, "is, what was the relation that subsisted between the defendant and Pearson. . . . Whether the defendant is liable or not for the negligence depends upon whether Pearson is to be considered as his servant at the time. If a domestic servant in the regular employment of the defendant had been ordered by the defendant to go and clear out the drain, no doubt he would have rendered his master liable. What difference does it make, that instead of his domestic servant the defendant employs Pearson, a common labourer, to do the job? The defendant might have superintended the job and given directions until the work was completed; and if so, Pearson was his servant pro hac vice, and the defendant liable as master. Consistently with the case of Peachey v. Rowland, (13 C. B. 182), and the other cases, I think the relationship of master and servant existed, and for the mischief that arose from the negligence of the servant respondent superior." Coleridge, J., observed that the defendant, by employing a person of skill in doing the particular work he is employed to do, relieved himself from actually superintending the particular work, but that the fact of employing a skilled person did not release him from the effect of such person's negligence, any more than if he employed a domestic servant. Crompton, J., seemed to think that the true test in such cases was, "whether the employer had any control over the persons employed; and whether the payment was by the day or piece could make no difference." "The defendant," continued his Lordship, "in this case could, during the progress of the work, overlook and direct what was to be done, and the manner of doing it, and it would be rather against common sense to say that a man employed in that way is a contractor. It is only on the ground of the relationship of employer and contractor being different from that of master and servant that I can understand the authorities." The verdict, therefore, was allowed to stand.

It follows from the above case that the principle which ought to guide us to a right conclusion in cases of this nature is—

First, what is the relationship that exists between the employer and employed. If it be that of master and servant, then the employer is liable; if that of employer and contractor, then he is not liable.

Secondly, that the true test to ascertain the relationship between the parties is, whether the employer has any control over the person employed; that is, whether the employer has the power of superintending the work, and directing it to be done in such manner as he pleases. It is obvious that in cases where he has not such power, but the employed agrees to do the work, and the mode of performing it is under his absolute control, the relationship that exists between the parties is that of employer and contractor.

Thirdly, whether the party employed is competent and skilful is no true criterion; for in all cases of master and servant, of employer and contractor, it is for the interest of employers that they should engage the services of competent and skilful persons, and it is to be presumed that they naturally would do so. In Peachey v. Rowland, (13 C. B. 182), the case mentioned by Lord Campbell, the facts were these:—The defendants, who were builders, had erected some houses by the side of a highway, and had contracted with Messrs. Scott & Redkin to do the brickwork, and with one Ansell to fill in the earth of a drain conducting from the houses to the main sewer, running under the highway. The road had been opened, and the earth afterwards filled in upon the drain above the level of the road, and so left without light or signal. The plaintiff drove his cart against it, and received the injuries of which he complained. It appeared from the evidence that one of the defendants had been upon the premises four or five days before the accident, when the earth upon the drain was much in the same state as it was when the accident occurred, but it appeared he had no control over or anything to do with the way in which the earth was filled in. Jervis, C. J., on the authority of Knight v. Fox (5 Exch. 721) and Overton v. Freeman, (21 L. J., C. P., 52), ruled that the defendants were not liable, and this ruling was upheld by the Court of Common Pleas.

The first question in this case would be, according to the principle we have deduced from Sadler v. Henlock, what is the relation subsisting between the employer and employed? Is it that of master and servant, or employer and contractor? To answer this question, it is necessary to ascertain whether the defendants had any control over Ansell. It appeared that they had not. The relationship subsisting, therefore, between the parties being that of employer and contractor, the defendants clearly were not liable; and on this ground this case, as stated by Lord Campbell, is perfectly consistent with Sadler v. Henlock. That this was the correct ground of the decision can be gathered from an observation of Jervis, C. J., in the course of the argument, where, in distinguishing this case from Burgess v. Grey, (1 C. B. 578), he said, "In Burgess v. Grey there was an admission by the defendant that he had not abandoned his control over the work." Maule, J., however, in delivering his judgment, put the case on the ground of Ansell having committed a nuisance, from which a private injury resulted. He said, "The true view is, that the evidence here in substance shewed that the defendants had nothing at all to do with the filling in of the earth. It shewed only that they had employed

Ansell to fill it in, leaving him to do it as he pleased, in a proper or improper manner, and that he did it in such a way as to commit a nuisance, from which a private injury resulted to the plaintiff. . . . With respect to Randleston v. Murray, (8 Ad. & El. 109), the occurrence there does not appear to have taken place in a highway. . . . But Randleston v. Murray was not the case of a public wrong." In Randleston v. Murray, which was a case in which a master porter was employed by a warehouseman to remove a barrel from his warehouse, the master porter employed his own men and tackle, and through the negligence of the men the tackle failed and injured the plaintiff. The Court, in giving judgment in that case, held the defendant liable, on the express ground of the master porter and the other men all standing in the relationship of master and servants. This is clear from the judgments of the learned judges. Littledale, J., says, "It seems to me to make no difference whether the persons whose negligence occasions the injury be servants of the defendant, paid by daily wages, or be brought to the warehouse by a person employed by the defendant." The distinction which Maule, J., endeavoured to draw between Peachey v. Rowland and Randleston v. Murray does not interfere with the principle laid down by Crompton, J., and the other judges, in Sadler v. Henlock. It is the same principle which governs Knight v. Fox and Overton v. Freeman. In the former case the defendant was held not to be liable, on the ground that the relationship subsisting between the defendant and the wrongdoer was not one of master and servant, but of employer and contractor. In that case Parke, B., says, "The act complained of was not an act done by Cockrane (the wrongdoer) in the character of a servant of the defendants." And Alderson, B., says, "The real question, and the only one, is, whether the negligent act by which the injury was occasioned to the plaintiff was the act of Cockrane as the defendants' servant; for if it was, they are responsible to the plaintiff for the injury she has sustained. But the evidence shews that when that negligent act was occasioned by Cockrane he was acting as sub-contractor." And in Overton v. Freeman, Maule, J., says, "One mode of inquiring whether the defendant is liable in cases like the present is to see whether the act was done by his servant. If the person who committed the act be so considered, the defendant will be liable; but he cannot be so considered if he is a sub-contractor." And the party causing the injury not being the servant of the defendant, the plaintiff was nonsuited. In both these last-cited cases the act occasioning the injury being a nuisance was held to make no difference in the liability of the defendant; and Parke, B., in Knight v. Fox, explained that such distinction could exist only where the nuisance was connected with a man's house or with his fixed property. And this is consistent with the judgment of Rolfe, B., in Reedie v. The London and North-western Railway Company, (4 Exch. 256); and the reason given why such a liability should attach in such a case is lucidly stated in the following words:—"His liability" (that is, of the owner of real property) "must be founded on the principle, that he has not taken due care to prevent the doing of acts which it was his duty to prevent, whether done by servants or others. If, for instance, a person occupying a house or a field should permit another to carry on there a noxious trade, so as to be a nuisance to his neighbours, it may be that he would be responsible, though the acts complained of were neither his acts nor those of his servants. He would have violated the rule of law, sic utere tuo ut alienum non lēdas."

It is upon the principle of qui facit per alium facit per se that the master is responsible for the acts of his servant, and it is easy to understand that such a maxim cannot apply to the case of employer and contractor: the act of a party over whom the employer has no control cannot in any way be considered as the act of the employer. This maxim is thus cited and applied by Parke, B., in his judgment in Quarman v. Burnett, (6 M. & W. 499)—"That person is undoubtedly liable who stood in the relation of master to the wrongdoer—he who selected him as his servant from the knowledge of or belief in his skill and care, and who may remove him for misconduct, and whose orders he was bound to receive and obey; and whether such servant has been appointed by the master directly, or intermediately through the intervention of an agent authorised by him to appoint servants for him, can make no difference. But the liability by virtue of the principle of relation of master and servant must cease where the relation itself ceases to exist; and no other person than the master of such servant can be liable, on the simple ground that the servant is the servant of another, and his act the act of another. Consequently a third person entering into a contract with the master, which does not raise the relation of master and servant at all, is not thereby rendered liable; and to make such person liable, recourse must be had to a different and more extended principle, namely, that a person is liable not only for the acts of his own servant, but for any injury which arises by the act of another person in carrying into execution that which that other person has contracted to do for his benefit." Such also were the views expressed by Lord Tenterden and Littledale, J., in Laugher v. Pointer, (5 B. & Cr. 547), and acted upon in Milligan v. Wedge, (12 Ad. & El. 737); Rapson v. Cubitt, (9 M. & W. 710); Martin v. Timberley, (7 Jur., part 1, p. 150); and Winterbottom v. Wright, (10 M. & W. 109); and also in the courts of America. (See the judgment of Mr. Chief Justice Shaw in Sproul v. Hemmingway, 14 Pick. 71).

It seems, however, from Ellis v. The Sheffield Gas Consumers Company, (2 El. & Bl. 767), that where the relationship of employer and contractor subsists, and the contract is illegal, and the act done in pursuance of such illegal contract occasions an injury to a third person, the employer is liable for the damage done. And Erle, J., there said, "The act of the person who is here called the contractor was the act done by him under the special direction of the defendants; and that appears to me to distinguish this case from those in which the employer was held not liable for the act done by the contractor not in accordance with his contract."

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

UPON the trial of Sir John Dean Paul and Messrs. Strahan and Bates at the Central Criminal Court on the 26th and 27th ult., for having unlawfully made away with and pledged certain securities intrusted to them as bankers under the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 49, it was contended on their behalf, that having, as bankrupts, made a disclosure of the whole transaction before the Court of Bankruptcy, they were protected under sect. 52. It appeared, however, that they themselves proffered the disclosure to the Court of Bankruptcy, and also that it was not full or true as to the specific offence now charged against them. The learned judges (Alderson, B., Martin, B., and Willes, J.) thereupon refused to reserve the point. A previous application had been made for leave to plead double, by pleading this defence and also a plea of "not guilty," but it was refused, as being altogether without precedent.

CONSOLIDATION OF THE STATUTE LAW.

EXTRACTS FROM THE APPENDIX TO THE REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONERS.

It was not, however, completed in time, and the Lord Chancellor was compelled to lay the Report on the table of the House of Lords in an imperfect state, in August, 1853. The actual printing and circulation of the Report was delayed until, I think, the month of January, 1854, in the hope that Mr. Coode would complete his work, and on the faith of repeated promises from him that he would do so; but at length, the Lord Chancellor's patience being exhausted, the rest of the Report was printed off and circulated, with a note by Mr. Coode that "the Digest of the Acts for the Relief of the Poor was contained in separate volumes, and would be circulated as soon as the letter-press was corrected."

Notwithstanding that the motives for which the printing of this digest had been originally authorised (namely, as a specimen of a peculiar mode of digesting the statute law) had by this time almost ceased to exist, yet further time was still extended to Mr. Coode, even till considerably after the Commission (which was only appointed for a year) had expired. But finally learning from the Queen's printers, about the end of May, 1854, that the work was still in an imperfect state, and that Mr. Coode was continuing to send partial additions or alterations, which would probably involve much additional expense, without any definite prospect of the work being completed, I thought it my duty to advise the Lord Chancellor to direct the printers not to proceed any further with it.

On the above-mentioned motion being made, I obtained from the printers, and caused to be returned to the House of Commons, the sheets of the work in the state in which it was when suspended. The House has not thought fit to order it to be printed, I believe.

My object in laying the foregoing observations before the Board has not been merely to defend myself against any personal charges, expressed or implied; but it has appeared to me that the other members of the Commission were entitled to be put in possession of the circumstances respecting the Expurgatory List, both because they may on the one hand be considered responsible for having neglected to publish it, and on the other for having published it, especially as the words "Statute-law Commission" have been printed on the cover, though, in fact, neither the late nor the present Board are in any way responsible for it.

June 13, 1855,

[The following paper is one of the Reports which have been prepared by me for the use of the Lord Chancellor, in discharge of the duty which I have undertaken (as was explained by his Lordship to the Board on the 7th February) of examining and reporting on all the Law Bills introduced in either House of Parliament. The Lord Chancellor has desired that it should be printed for the use of the Board, because many of the practical points which have recently been discussed by the Board come under consideration in the course of it.—H. NOTE ON THE PERSONAL ESTATES OF INTESTATES BILL, 1856.

[H. L., No. 126. Brought from Commons.]

It will be convenient to consider this bill under two different aspects:—

1. As a specimen of consolidation or rewriting of the statute law.

2. With reference to the alterations of the law which it is intended to effect.

1. Viewing the bill as a specimen of consolidation, and setting aside for the present all consideration of the alterations of the law introduced in it, it is to be observed, in the first place, that the whole statute law by which the distribution of the personal estates of intestates in England amongst the next of kin is regulated is comprised in one act, the 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 10, with one alteration made by the 1 Jac. 2, c. 17, s. 7, and one probably unnecessary declaration in the Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. 2, c. 8, s. 25, that the first-mentioned act should not affect the right of husbands to administer to their wives' estates*. This being the case, the necessity for any consolidation at all of that law is not very apparent.

One advantage, however, might be derived from repealing and re-enacting the statute law in a case like the present, namely, the improvement of the language in precision and conciseness, and the incorporation of those decisions by which the meaning of the terms in the old acts has been ascertained and fixed.

The acts of 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 10, and 1 Jac. 2, c. 17, are extremely ill-drawn and verbose, and by no means provide in distinct terms for all the varieties of cases which have arisen and may arise in the course of administering the estates of intestates. Upwards of thirty pages of Williams on Executors (part 3, book 4) are filled with the decisions by which, in the course of two centuries, deficiencies have been supplied and doubts solved, until at length the law has been worked out in a tolerably complete and distinct manner. It might therefore be thought useful and proper to combine all the law thus elaborated in one well-drawn, clear, and complete statute. It appears, however, on examining the present bill, that its framers did not even attempt to produce either a well-drawn or a complete enactment, but contented themselves with merely repealing the old statutes, and then enacting them over again in the old words, without effecting any improvement, without omitting one word of the quantity of verbiage, or incorporating one of the great number of explanatory or supplementary decisions of which the old acts have been the subject.

It is conceived that such a bill is, in fact, not only useless, but very dangerous, and that it would be contrary to all principle to pass it. For, under the circumstances above stated, it is clear that this bill does not represent the existing state of the law at all. The law at present consists of the old acts, with the addition of all the judicial legislation (as it may be termed) of the last two centuries; and if the old acts are repealed, the decisions on them must fall with them, and the new act will have to be construed anew; or if it be said that the old decisions are to be still applicable to the new act, that will be in reality equivalent to saying that this new act shall be to all intents and purposes the same thing as the old acts; and if so, it will not be easy to ascertain the use or the effect of this repeal and re-enactment. Even if there had not been a single judicial decision on the subject there could be no justification for deliberately re-enacting what is admitted on all hands to be very ill-drawn and very imperfect. Unless it is to be improved, and the deficiencies supplied, it should at least be left untouched; but in a case like the present the impropriety is much greater. What would be thought of a proposal to repeal the Statute of Frauds, and then to make a new law in the old words, without any reference to all that has been contributed to the law on the subject by the decided cases?

It has been stated on behalf of the bill, that, "if passed, it will save much trouble to every one who has occasion to refer to the acts relating to the personal estates of intestates, for he will see at a glance in one short bill the whole law, without having to refer to several acts scattered over many volumes." It will be evident, however, from the preceding remarks, that this bill will not shew at a glance the whole law, and will only mislead any one who is induced to suppose that it does; and it will, in fact, afford no assistance either to the general public or to the professed lawyer.

2. The foregoing observations have been made on the bill, regarding it as a specimen of consolidation or new exposition of the existing law; but it is also intended to effect some changes in the law, and these it next becomes necessary to consider.

It is stated that the object of the bill is, first, to abolish the customs of London and York and other places; secondly, to deal with the personal estate of an intestate mother who advances a child, in the same way as the statute now does with that of an intestate father who advances a child; and, thirdly, to treat as an advancement the inheritance which under the custom of borough English descends to the youngest son*.

Setting aside for the present any inquiry as to the expediency of these alterations, it is proposed to consider the mode in which this bill attempts to effect them.

1. As to the abolition of the customs, no mention at all of these customs is to be found in the bill, but it is nevertheless alleged that they are repealed thereby, on the following grounds:—The act of 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 10, of which this bill is for the most part a reproduction, contains a clause, "that this act, or anything herein contained, shall not in any ways prejudice or hinder the customs observed within the city of London, or within the province of York, or other places having known and received customs peculiar to them, but that the same customs may be observed as formerly, anything herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding."

This clause is not repeated in the present bill, and it seems to be considered that this omission is sufficient to effect a repeal of the customs in question. It is, however, on the contrary, submitted that this is no repeal of the customs at all; or, at any rate, that it would be a matter of serious doubt whether it is a repeal or not. It is a known rule of construction that enactments of a general nature do not repeal private or local laws to which they do not specially refer: the exception, therefore, in the act of Car. 2 was probably superfluous, though it was rightly inserted to prevent doubt; and the omission of the exception in this bill, without any declaration of what was intended by that omission, can hardly be sufficient to effect the intended object, especially as the repeal of these very customs in cases of testacy has been effected by express enactments—4 Will. & M. c. 2; 7 & 8 Will. 3, c. 38; and 11 Geo. 1, c. 18; which last-mentioned act, moreover, (relating to the custom of London), expressly preserves the custom in cases of intestacy, by its 18th section; or, even admitting that it could be established by ingenious arguments that such an omission was equivalent to a repeal, what reason is there for effecting by elaborate inferences from peculiarities of construction, and comparisons with a former act "in pari materia," what might be done easily, clearly, and effectually by a simple declaration of the intention that the customs should be repealed?

* It would appear from the table of contents prefixed to the bill, that parts of two other acts are included in the consolidation—29 Car. 2, c. 31, s. 25, and 1 Jac. 1, c. 17, s. 7; but these are only misprints for the acts already mentioned. It may be added here, that the description given in this table of the contents of the 6th clause is quite inaccurate, and even unintelligible.

* Gavelkind should apparently have been added.

2 and 3. As to the extension of the rules as to advancements to the case of advancement by the mother, this seems to be properly effected; but the way in which the same rules are extended to lands descending on a younger son by the custom of borough English is open to objection. It is effected thus—the act of Car. 2 provides, that in case any child other than the heir-at-law shall have any estate by settlement from the intestate, or shall be advanced by the intestate in his lifetime, such estate must be brought into hotchpot before such child takes any share of the intestate's personal estate; and the way in which the proposed alteration of the law is effected is by adding the words "by descent;" so that the passage runs, "other than such child or children (not being heir-at-law) who shall have any estate by descent or by settlement," &c. It is conceived that though the meaning of this provision might perhaps be arrived at by a good lawyer after some consideration, it is not expedient to make alterations in the law in this uncertain manner, and that it would be more proper to express distinctly the intention of the Legislature. It may be added, that there is some ground to contend that the terms used are altogether inadequate, for it may be said that "heir-at-law" is not equivalent (as it seems to be here considered) to "eldest son," but has no meaning except with reference to something to be inherited, and that a youngest son is just as much "heir-at-law" of lands subject to the custom of borough English as an eldest son is heir-at-law of other lands; in which case, to speak of a child taking by descent, not being heir-at-law, is a contradiction in terms.

Passing to the expediency of these alterations of the law, the intended repeal of the customs of York and London seems advantageous; but with regard to the extension of the rule as to advancements, it is submitted, that though, if retained as to a father's estate, it is reasonable that it should be extended to a mother's, it would be far better to repeal the rule as to both, as it is inconvenient, leads to doubts and family disputes, and probably defeats the intentions and expectations of the parents.

In addition to the general objections above urged, there are several points of detail in which the bill is open to animadversion.

In the first place, as an alteration in the testamentary jurisdiction of the country is so immediately contemplated, this seems an inappropriate time for re-enacting the old rules as to the mode of granting administration, the form of administration bonds, &c.

Secondly, if it was proper to re-enact the provision of the 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 10, as to administration bonds, &c., there are some other old enactments which ought to have been incorporated and repealed, as the 31 Edw. 3, st. 1, c. 11; 21 Hen. 3, c. 5; 43 Eliz. c. 8; and the 30 Car. 2, st. 1, c. 7.

Thirdly, as regards the extension of this bill to Ireland, I am not able to judge whether it has been accu-ately and completely effected. I may, however, observe that it would seem that the 7th and 8th sections of the Irish act, which represent the 6th and 7th sections of the English act of James II, ought to have been repealed as well as the first six.

Other small inaccuracies make it appear that the bill has been hastily and carelessly drawn. The 5th section begins, "That there be no representation," &c., whereas the form of the other sections is different: in the 7th section "his" is put for "her."

The general absence of any attempt to make the language plain and concise has been already noticed.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 10, 1855.

It is a matter of no small importance to a commercial community that the rules of law which govern mercantile transactions should be founded on principles at once reasonable and intelligible. To no part of our mercantile law does this remark apply with greater force than to that which relates to the transfer of negotiable instruments*. It is obvious that the business of our merchants and traders would be most seriously impeded if it were necessary for them, previously to taking bills of exchange or promissory notes, to make inquiries as to the consideration which had passed between prior parties whose names might appear upon them. The law, therefore, prima facie presumes that a bill or note is given on a sufficient consideration. This presumption, however, may be rebutted, but the onus of proving a want of consideration, as a general rule, lies on him who impugns it. An illustration of the exceptions to this rule is afforded by the recent case of Fitch v. Jones, (1 Jur., N.S., part 1, p. 854; 24 L. J., Q. B., 293). In that case an action was brought on a promissory note drawn by Jones &

Co., and payable to one Needham, and by him indorsed to Taylor, who indorsed it to the plaintiff. The defendants pleaded that they and Needham had entered into certain bets upon the amount of hop duty that would be payable in 1854, and that the bill was given for the balance of money due upon such bets, and that the indorsees respectively had notice of the premises, and that there was no value or consideration for the note. At the trial of the cause, Coleridge, J., told the jury that it was necessary for the defendants to establish either one of three propositions—first, that the plaintiff had notice of the origin of the note when he took it; or, secondly, that the plaintiff gave no value for the indorsement; or, thirdly, that the note was overdue when he took it. No evidence was given by the defendants to establish any of these facts, and the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff. A rule was afterwards obtained for a new trial, on the ground that the judge had misdirected the jury as to the onus of proof. The Court ruled that there had been no misdirection; and Lord Campbell, C. J., in giving judgment as to whether, in cases of this kind, it lies upon the plaintiff or the defendant to give evidence of value, said, "This depends upon whether there is a presumption of law that there was no consideration, which the plaintiff is bound to rebut. Where fraud or illegality is established there is such a presumption, because in such cases the law supposes that the original party, not being able to sue upon the instrument himself, has handed it over to another to sue upon it for his benefit. This presumption so raised by the law must be rebutted by the holder shewing affirmatively that he gave value. It is not quite correct to say that the onus of proving value is cast upon the plaintiff; but the plaintiff, being presumed to stand in the shoes of the party from whom he took the instrument, and to be his agent for the purpose of carrying out the fraudulent or illegal intention, is bound to get rid of that presumption. But where there is a mere absence of consideration, no such presumption arises, and therefore there is no occasion for the plaintiff to rebut it." And Erle, J., said, "It is perfectly clear, that, as a general rule, all affirmative pleas by way of excuse by a party prima facie liable upon a promissory note must be proved by him; and this is in terms an affirmative plea. An exception exists in a class of pleas of considerable importance, where it is alleged against the holder of a negotiable instrument that it is founded on illegality, and that he took it without consideration. If the illegality is proved, it raises a presumption that the holder took the instrument without value, and so the burthen of proving value is cast upon the plaintiff, so far as this, that if no evidence be given on either side, the presumption that he took it without value prevails. It is therefore the plaintiff's duty to give evidence of his having paid value." The learned judge continued—"A party, without violating the common law, may make such a wager, and may pay the money if he lose it; and if, instead of paying the bet, he gives a note promising to pay at a future date, he still violates no statute. I think that the effect of this plea is, that the maker gave this note to the payee without any consideration whatever, and therefore that it is not tainted with illegality or fraud."

The law, as it at present stands, was first so established in Bailey v. Bidwell, (13 M. & W. 73). In that case the plaintiff, who was the indorsee of a promissory note, brought his action upon it, and it appeared at the trial that the note had been given by the defendant to one Bailey in consideration of his not opposing a petition which the defendant had presented to the Court of Bankruptcy under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116. On behalf of the defendant the proceedings in the Bankruptcy Court were put in, and Parke, B., ruled, that as the defendant had established that the note was illegal in its inception, the plaintiff was bound to prove consideration. On a motion to review his Lordship's ruling, the Court held that it was correct. Parke, B., there says, "It certainly has been, since the later cases, the universal understanding, that if the note were proved to have been obtained by fraud, or affected by illegality, that afforded a presumption that the person who had been guilty of the illegality would dispose of it, and would place it in the hands of another person to sue upon it; and that such proof casts upon the plaintiff the burthen of shewing that he was a bona fide indorsee for value. That has been considered in later times as settled; and that being so, it was perfectly right in this case to cast upon the plaintiff the burthen of proving that he gave value for the note." This last-cited case is an example of a bill being illegal in its inception. The two following cases are instances in which the bill was tainted with fraud. In Smith v. Braine (16 Q. B. 244) the plaintiff, as indorsee, brought an action against the acceptor of a bill; and it appeared at the trial that the defendant's mother had drawn the bill for the defendant's accommodation, and indorsed it in blank; that the bill was delivered to one Morton for the purpose of getting it discounted; that Morton delivered it to one Chandler for the same purpose; and that Chandler promised to pay the amount of the bill to Morton, less 5%, which he was to receive for his trouble, but that he applied the proceeds of the bill to his own use. When these facts had been proved on behalf of the defendant, the plaintiff's counsel contended that he was entitled to the verdict, as it had not been proved that Chandler had indorsed the bill without value, or that the bill had been obtained from the defendant by fraud. Wightman, J., however, was of opinion that enough had been shewn to cast upon the plaintiff the onus of proving that he had given value for the bill, in order to entitle him to a verdict. The plaintiff then called a witness, who proved that he gave Chandler 43% for the bill, and that the plaintiff indorsed away the bill, and about a week before it became due he asked the defendant whether he would be prepared to take it up; and the plaintiff then for the first time heard from the defendant that he had been swindled out of it, and would not pay it. The jury on this evidence found that the plaintiff had given no bona fide value for the bill. The Court above held that Wightman, J., was right in ruling that it lay with the plaintiff to prove that he had given value for the bill after the defendant had established, that contrary to good faith Chandler had indorsed it away. Lord Campbell, C. J., in delivering the judgment of the Court, said, "Since the New Rules the judges have, with entire approbation, directed juries, that where the bill was illegal in its inception, or where the immediate indorser to the plaintiff obtained possession of it by fraud, the want of consideration as between him and the plaintiff may be presumed." In Harvey v. Towers (6 Exch. 656) it appeared that the defendant had accepted a bill in payment of some mining shares which he had been induced to purchase through the representation of the drawer, and evidence was adduced to shew that the shares were worthless and the transaction fraudulent. Upon this evidence, the defendant submitted that the onus of proving that there was a consideration for the bill lay upon the plaintiff. The judge, however, expressed an opinion that proof of fraud did not cast upon the plaintiff the burthen of proving consideration, inasmuch as the affirmative of the issue was on the defendant; but the Court of Exchequer, on motion for a new trial or to enter a nonsuit, held that the learned judge who presided at the trial was mistaken, and directed a nonsuit to be entered. Pollock, C. B., in giving judgment, says, "I agree with what Lord Campbell said in Smith v. Braine, that no principle can be extracted from the cases on this subject before the New Rules. But it is now settled, that if a bill be founded in illegality or fraud, or has been the subject of felony or fraud, upon that being proved the holder is compelled to shew that he gave value for it. That was established in Bailey v. Bidwell; and subsequently by the Court of Queen's Bench in Smith v. Braine, in a considered judgment. It has been contended, that, as a matter of pleading, that view cannot be supported. I think, however, that as a plea must contain everything necessary to constitute a good defence, and as the mere fact of fraud would not afford any defence unless the holder took the bill without value, it was incumbent on the defendant to allege that fact in his plea; and the question is, on whom is cast the onus of proving it?" It follows, therefore, from the recent decisions, that where the defendant establishes the fact that the bill has been affected by illegality or fraud in its inception, or has been the subject of felony, or has been lost, it lies on the holder to shew that he gave a bona fide consideration for it. It appears also that the cases of Paterson v. Hardacre, (4 Taunt. 114); Hungate v. Brown, (1 Moo. & R. 445); Brown v. Philpot, (2 Moo. & R. 285); and the other cases decided before the New Rules, cannot now be considered as law*.

* In Paterson v. Hardacre, Lord Mansfield, C. J., held, that whenever a defendant meant to avail himself, as a defence against an action brought upon a bill of exchange, of the cir-

Before we quit this subject we may briefly refer to the case of Raphael v. The Bank of England, lately tried at Nisi Prius, and with respect to which a motion for a new trial was unsuccessfully made in the Court of Common Pleas on Tuesday last. There it appeared that Bank of England notes having been stolen, notices thereof had been sent to the plaintiff (a banker) amongst others; such notice had been filed with a great number of other notices, and two years afterwards the bank notes came into his possession. The jury found that he had given full value for them, that he had had notice of the robbery of the notes, but that at the time of his taking them he had not actual knowledge, although he had the means of knowledge, if he had taken proper care of the circular. Upon this it was held that he was entitled to the verdict as being a bona fide holder for value.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

In Knight v. Pocock (C. P., Nov. 6) an application was made to set aside a writ of summons issued under the Bills of Exchange Summary Procedure Act, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 67, upon the ground that the promissory note sued upon was not accurately copied on the back of the writ, according to sect. 1 and the schedule. The defect relied upon was the omission of the defendant's name as the maker of the note; but the Court amended the writ, under sect. 20 of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1852, (which is incorporated with the Bills of Exchange Act), by allowing the name to be added to the writ and copy. The copy had been served. The application was made on the twelfth day after service, but the Court said it was not too late, as no step in the cause had been taken since service.

With regard to the Bills of Exchange Act, it may here be noticed, that in the form of indorsement on the writ of summons no mention is made of costs, and therefore it would seem that on payment of the principal and interest within four days proceedings may be stayed. It would seem that the judges have not the power, under the Common-law Procedure Acts, of making a rule that will meet this difficulty; and until it is obviated the safer course (except in extreme cases) will be to proceed under the old system.

cumstance that the bill had been lost or fraudulently obtained, and that the plaintiff had no right to the possession thereof, it was necessary that the defendant should distinctly give notice to the plaintiff that he meant to insist at the trial that the plaintiff should prove the consideration upon which he received the bill. FRAUDS BY BANKERS.

THE act 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, under which Messrs. Strahan, Paul, & Bates have been convicted, was passed in consequence of a fraud committed by one Walsh, a stockbroker, upon Sir Thomas Plumer, afterwards Master of the Rolls, and the inadequacy of the law at that time to meet the offence. A note of this case, which is set forth in 2 Russell on Crimes, p. 30, may be interesting to our readers:—The prosecutor, Sir Thomas Plumer, having contracted, in July, 1811, for the purchase of a large estate, consulted the prisoner as to the most advantageous time to sell out stock, so as to be prepared with the purchase money about the ensuing Michaelmas. The price of the stock was then very low, and the prisoner advised that the sale should be delayed as long as possible, which recommendation was adopted, and the prosecutor requested the prisoner to apprise him from time to time of the variations that might occur in the state of the market. The prosecutor was not called upon to pay the purchase money at the time first mentioned, as the title to the estate was not then completed; but in the month of October, having reason to believe that the deeds would be ready on or before the ensuing Christmas-day, he communicated that circumstance to the prisoner, and consulted him as to the expediency of disposing of the stock immediately, when the prisoner again advised him to delay the sale. On the 25th November the prisoner stated to the prosecutor that he then apprehended a fall in the price of stock, and apprised him that the transfer books at the Bank would shut on the 3rd December, and soon after he became extremely urgent with the prosecutor to dispose of his stock immediately, writing to him, and frequently calling upon him for the purpose of giving such advice, and stating as the reason for his importunity a probable fall in the price of stock. The prosecutor on the 28th November gave the prisoner a power to sell out a quantity of stock, which on the ensuing morning he contracted to sell for 21,700*l*. The prosecutor went on the next morning into the city with the intention of finishing the business, but the prisoner stated that some previous notice must be given to the purchaser to be ready with the money, in consequence of which the prosecutor appointed the 4th December for making the transfer. On that day the prosecutor attended and transferred the stock, and expressly ordered the prisoner immediately to invest the proceeds in Exchequer bills, and lodge them on his account at his bankers, Messrs. Gosling & Co., in Fleet-street; but the prisoner told him it was then too late to procure Exchequer bills to such an amount, which the prosecutor supposed to be true, (though in fact it was not), and therefore left him to receive the 21,700*l*. of the purchaser, desiring that he would pay it in to his bankers on the same day. The prisoner accordingly received the 21,700*l*., paid it in to his own bankers, Roberts & Co., and on the same day paid into Gosling & Co.'s his own cheque on Roberts & Co. for 21,500*l*. on the prosecutor's account. On the 5th December he called on the prosecutor, and received from him a cheque (the instrument mentioned in the indictment) on Gosling & Co. for 22,200*l*. The prosecutor directed him to go to Gosling's and get the money for it, telling him that it was for the precise and express purpose, and for no other purpose whatever, of laying it out in Exchequer bills, which the prisoner positively promised to do, and either pay the bills into Gosling & Co.'s, or bring them to the prosecutor by four o'clock on the same day. The prisoner then went to Gosling & Co.'s with the cheque, and there received for it 22,200*l*. in twenty-two bank notes of 1000*l*. each, and one bank note of 200*l*.; and on the same day he purchased with part of that money 2500*l*. Exchequer bills, which he lodged at Gosling & Co.'s on the prosecutor's account, and took a receipt for them. About half-past four o'clock on the same day the prisoner called on the prosecutor, and produced the receipt for the Exchequer bills, and stated that he had paid the remainder of the money into Gosling & Co.'s, as he had contracted with Coutts & Co. for Exchequer bills to the amount of 16,000*l*., but that one of the partners of the house of Coutts & Co. was at that time absent from London, had the bills locked up in a drawer, and would not return to deliver them until the following Saturday, the 7th December, on which day the prisoner said he would call again for the prosecutor's cheque for that amount, and lodge the Exchequer bills for which he had so contracted at Gosling & Co.'s on the prosecutor's account. The prosecutor did not examine the papers delivered to him by the prisoner during the time the prisoner was with him; but on looking at them after he was gone away, he was surprised to find that there was only a receipt for the Exchequer bills, and no receipt for the residue of the money. This circumstance caused suspicion, and an inquiry was almost immediately made, when it was ascertained that the prisoner had on the afternoon of that same day set out for Falmouth in the mail coach, in which he had previously secured a place in a fictitious name, and that he had left a note, addressed to the prosecutor, with his clerk, dated on Saturday, the 7th December, and stating that the business respecting Coutts's Exchequer bills could not be finished until the following Monday. This note he had desired might not be delivered till the Saturday. It appeared also, that for some time before he absconded the prisoner had been labouring under great pecuniary embarrassments, and had meditated an emigration to America, and that about the 29th November he had applied to an American broker to procure for him American stock to the amount of 11,000*l*., and stock nearly to that amount was accordingly bought for him, and paid for by him on the Thursday, the 5th December, with eleven of the same bank notes of 1000*l*. each which he had received for the prosecutor's cheque; and it further appeared that several others of the 1000*l*. notes so received for the prosecutor's cheque had been paid away by him to different persons on his own account. It was proved also that on the same day (Thursday, the 5th December) he paid to a dealer in foreign coin 300*l*. for doubloons, which he had contracted for three days before, and which were delivered to him on that day; and further, that he left his country house at Hackney early on the same morning, and, having procured the foreign coin and American securities, he absconded by means of the Falmouth mail. When the route which he had taken was discovered he was speedily pursued, and apprehended at Falmouth as he was about to get on board a packet for Lisbon, to which place he acknowledged that he intended to go in the first instance, and afterwards take the opportunity of getting to America. On being told the charge made against him, he delivered up the 11,000*l*. American bank shares and the bag of doubloons.

The question left to the jury was, whether the prisoner before he received the cheque had formed the design of converting the money which should be received by means of it to his own use, or whether that design arose in his mind after he was in possession of it. They were directed to find the prisoner guilty if they were of opinion that the former was the fact. The jury were of that opinion, and returned a verdict of guilty. Judgment was then respite, and the case reserved, in order that the opinion of the judges might be taken upon several objections made by the prisoner's counsel.

In Hilary Term (Feb. 1, 1812) the case was argued in the Exchequer Chamber, before all the judges, (except Lawrence, J.), by Scarlett for the prisoner, and Gurney for the Crown; and again on the 14th February, 1812, before all the judges, (except Lawrence and Chambre, JJ.), when all the judges present were of opinion that it was not a felony, and that the conviction was wrong upon several grounds—first, because there was no fraud or contrivance to induce Sir Thomas Plumer to give the cheque; secondly, because the cheque could not be called his goods and chattels, and was of no value in his hands; thirdly, because he never had possession of the notes received at the bank, so that they could not be called his notes; and, fourthly, because the bankers were discharged of the money by paying it on the cheque, so that they were not defrauded, and it could not be said the money was stolen from them.

SALVAGE FOR HUMAN LIFE.—There seems to be a general impression among the public that there is no remuneration provided by law for saving human life in cases of wreck. That this opinion, however, is erroneous may be seen by reference to the Merchant Shipping Act, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104. By sect. 458, whenever any ship or boat is stranded, or otherwise in distress, on the shore of any sea or tidal water in the United Kingdom, and services are rendered by any persons in assisting such ship, or saving the lives of persons belonging to it, or saving cargo, &c., they are entitled to receive from the owners of the ship or cargo a reasonable amount of salvage, together with all expenses incurred in the performance of such services; and by sect. 459 salvage in respect of the preservation of life or lives shall be payable by the owners in priority to all other claims for salvage; and in cases where such ship or boat is destroyed, or where the value thereof is insufficient, after payment of the actual expenses incurred, to pay the amount of any salvage due in respect of any life or lives, the Board of Trade may in its discretion award to the salvors of such life or lives such sum as it deems fit out of the Mercantile Marine Fund.

INDIAN JUDICIAL APPOINTMENTS.—Sir Lawrence Peel having intimated his intention to resign the office of Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Calcutta, Sir James Colville has been raised to that office, and Sir Charles Jackson has been promoted from Bombay to Calcutta as puisne judge. The seat on the Bombay bench vacated by Sir C. Jackson has been offered to Sir William Jeffcott, who now holds the office of recorder of Singapore; and Mr. Richard M'Cauland, of the Irish Bar, has been appointed to the second recordership recently created in the eastern settlements, namely, that of Prince of Wales Island.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 17, 1855.

It has long been doubted by the majority of conveyancers whether a trustee or executor, having power to mortgage the trust property, can give the mortgagee a power of sale after default in payment of the mortgage debt. The question as to the power of an executor arose and was decided in the case of Russell v. Plaice, (18 Beav. 21; 18 Jur., part 1, p. 254), where an administratrix made a mortgage of leaseholds which formed part of the estate of the deceased, and by the mortgage deed gave to the mortgagee the usual power of sale after default. After default the mortgagee sold the property by auction, but the purchaser objected that the power of sale was invalid. On a bill filed by the mortgagee, specific performance of the contract was decreed. The Master of the Rolls, in giving judgment, after shewing by the authorities that the validity of a simple mortgage of assets by an executor or administrator could not be questioned, proceeded to consider the objection that the administratrix could not delegate to the mortgagee the power of sale which she possessed herself, being a trust to the execution of which she was bound to apply her own discretion. His Honor said, "I am of opinion that a little consideration of the distinction existing between the powers intrusted to her and those given to the mortgagee removes this objection. The power which the executor or administrator possesses of making a valid mortgage appears to me to include in it a power to give all that is properly incidental to that species of alienation. An executor who sells property of his testator necessarily gives the purchaser a power of selling the property bought, because such a power is incidental to, and inseparable from, the estate conferred upon him by the conveyance. The power of sale given to a mortgagee must, I think, be considered, not as the delegation of a power intrusted to the executor, which is a power to sell for the benefit of his cestui que trust, but as the creation of a new power to sell, not for the benefit of the persons interested in the testator's estate, but for the benefit of the person interested in the mortgage; that is, a power to render the mortgage effectual; and I think that the right to create this power is incidental to the authority of the executor to mortgage. If this were withheld, the persons interested in the assets would be injured; because in that case a mortgage could not be effected, unless on terms less advantageous than could be obtained if the person advancing his money obtained the same security as if he were dealing with the absolute owner of the estate. For the purpose of selling the estate of the testator, the executor is considered as the absolute owner, and has all the powers incidental to that character. On what principle can it be maintained that he is not to be regarded in the same light, and to have the same powers for the purpose of effecting a mortgage, which may be the most beneficial course to be adopted for his cestui que trust, and of which benefit the executor is constituted the sole judge?" His Honor then observed that his conclusion was confirmed by the consideration that the executor had power to pledge any part of the assets, and that a pledge carried with it an undoubted power of sale after default. The authority of the case as a decision on the general question is a little weakened by the fact that there were circumstances of acquiescence on the part of the next of kin sufficient to support the decision as against them, though this would of course be immaterial in a question between the purchaser and the creditors of the deceased. Except by analogy, the case cannot be treated as an authority as to the validity of a power of sale given to a mortgagee by trustees who are expressly authorised to mortgage the trust property; for the implied authority of an executor or administrator to deal with assets for the benefit of creditors as well as of the next of kin is very different from the authority which a trustee can derive only from the express terms of the particular trust under which he acts. However, there is a consideration, not very distinctly adverted to by the Court in Russell v. Plaise, which seems sufficient to dispose of the question, as well in respect of trustees as in respect of executors; and that is, that not merely the meaning of words, but the substance of rules of law and equity, must and do change with the condition and usages of society. When Lord Cottenham, in Walworth v. Holt, (4 My. & C. 635), affirmed it to be the duty of the Court of Chancery to adapt its practice and course of proceeding to the existing state of society, and not, by too strict an adherence to forms and rules established under different circumstances, to decline to administer justice and to enforce rights for which there was no other remedy, he merely made a special application of a general principle, to which not only all the existing rules of equity, but also the whole of our present commercial law and law of contracts owe their existence. We must construe words, when used at the present day, according to the existing usage; and we must modify rules, handed down to us from antiquity, so as to preserve their spirit by adapting them to altered circumstances. Thus, when a settlor in 1855 authorises his trustees to mortgage the trust estate, we inquire, not what Littleton or Coke understood by a mortgage, but what the settlor would mean and his lawyer would understand in 1855 by a direction to mortgage. Now, at the present day no one thinks of a mortgage otherwise than as a security including a power to sell after default and to give discharges for the purchase money; and when a settlor directs his trustees to make a mortgage, we are, without any foundation, imputing to him antiquated notions and antiquated language if we understand him to mean a mortgage such as would have been drawn by Sir Orlando Bridgman, and not such a mortgage as a conveyancer of the day, acting upon similar instructions, would prepare. Therefore, in the case of an express trust or authority to mortgage, we think that it is not stating the case too strongly to say that the trustee has an express authority to invest his mortgagee with a power of sale. In the case of an executor or administrator, again, the foundation of his authority to mortgage the assets is, that he is to raise money for the purposes of his trust by any of the ways ordinarily resorted to by a discreet owner under similar circumstances; and as a mortgage is an ordinary and may be a prudent mode of raising money, he may raise money by mortgage; but he is to do it in the way in which owners ordinarily do it; and that at the present day is by making a mortgage with power of sale.

A learned and experienced conveyancer, who has just published a work in which a variety of practical points are discussed with considerable learning and acuteness*, objects to the decision in Russell v. Plaise on several grounds. One is, that it involves the whole subject in doubt, by departing from the strict legal notion of a mortgage, and substituting the inquiry, whether the mortgage is ordinary or reasonable in all its details. But this is a difficulty incident to every discretionary power; and that executors and trustees have discretionary powers is undeniable. Whether they have exercised their discretion reasonably may in all cases be made a subject of inquiry.

Again: Mr. Clayton says that it is an improvident dealing with the property to give the mortgagee such a power, because, if the security be sufficient, "a mortgagee has no interest in obtaining the best price; he is not, as a trustee generally is, the friend of the beneficial owner; his only care is to realise his principal, interest, and costs: what the surplus may be matters not to him. Besides, an executor or other trustee generally has the advice and concurrence of the cestuis que trust. Thus, by transferring the sale to a mortgagee or his assign, we lose the best safeguard that can be devised for insuring care and fidelity—self-interest. We jeopardise the surplus as to its amount; and, secondly, we jeopardise it as to its very existence at all; for the mortgagee or his assign—an utter stranger to the mortgagor—may be a knave, and through his insolvency or otherwise it may be impossible to get the surplus out of his hands. Besides all this, is it not clear that by placing the surplus in the power of the mortgagee, or rather of his solicitor, we furnish him, the solicitor, with a strong inducement to charge his costs on a liberal scale?" We think it a sufficient answer to this to observe, that trustees are to act on behalf of the objects of their trust with the same prudence that men exercise on their own behalf, and that no man acting on his own behalf at the present day hesitates to place his estate in the power of a mortgagee, with the temptations and exposed to the dangers pointed out by Mr. Clayton; while, on the other hand, it might be difficult, if not impossible, to raise the required amount by means of a mortgage according to the fashion of two centuries ago; and against the risks of the mortgagee's neglect or dishonesty are to be set the facility of obtaining a transfer, and the avoidance of a foreclosure suit, which a mortgagee, knowing that he could not reckon on obtaining a final decree in less than twelve months, would be induced to commence at a time when, if he had the power of immediate sale, he would be content to rest upon his security, and wait until he should be actually in need of the money.

THE JURIST.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"An Attorney's Clerk" is referred to "Notes of the Week," ante, p. 439.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 24, 1855.

THE administration of justice has been materially improved during the last few years, and lawyers, as a body, have zealously aided in promoting these improvements. As a proof of this, it is sufficient to point to the spirit evinced by the legal periodicals during that time. It is, however, as much the fashion to abuse lawyers as it is to indulge in vague declamation about reforming the law, offering nothing that is tangible, practical, or new, in the way of remedy. Thus the Times of the 14th inst., after publishing long and dreary letters upon the subject of consolidating the law, which merely repeat in the most general terms certain theoretical notions, leading to nothing useful, commences a leader with these observations:—

"We have got all, we believe, that any amount of pressure can induce the class of practising lawyers to do for us, and until the public interest can be brought once more to bear on the subject, we despair of seeing the jurisdiction of the county courts extended, the submitting cases to them by consent facilitated, and the introduction of that which is the keystone to all real improvement in procedure—the personal appearance and examination of parties before the judge at the very first step in the cause."

It is difficult to see why "practising lawyers" should be blamed for not effecting changes which are within the province of the Legislature, and of the Legislature alone; but the fact is, that practising lawyers have been the persons who have done their best to promote these alterations. Thus the County Court Commissioners, who have in their report advocated the extension of the jurisdiction of those tribunals, (ante, p. 272), numbered among its members the Master of the Rolls, Mr. Justice Erle, Mr. Justice Crompton, Messrs. Keating, Koe, Pitt Taylor, Mullings, and Mr. Serjeant Dowling. Mr. Fitzroy was the only lay member. So, the only statute which in effect provides for the examination of the defendant by affidavit before a judge at an early stage of the cause is the Summary Procedure on Bills of Exchange Act, which was introduced into Parliament by Mr. Keating.

But, further, what is the fact as to these complaints, so easily uttered, especially when unaccompanied by the suggestion of any practical remedy? Is there so pressing a grievance, or any grievance in this respect, for which the legal Profession ought to be censured?

The jurisdiction of the county courts at present extends to any demand not exceeding 50*l., without consent of the parties, provided that it be not an action of ejectment, or one involving title to corporeal or incorporeal hereditaments, or to any toll, fair, market, or franchise, or involving the validity of any devise, bequest, or limitation under any will or settlement, or an action for libel, slander, crim. con., seduction, or breach of promise of marriage. By consent, actions of any nature, and involving any amount, may be tried in the county court, provided they be not actions for malicious prosecution, libel, slander, crim. con., seduction, or breach of promise of marriage.

So far from submission by consent being difficult, it is as simple a matter as can well be conceived. It is by a memorandum signed by the parties or their attorneys; and in order to induce parties to adopt this course the more readily, a right of appeal has been given in cases of submission by consent to the county court jurisdiction†.

Then as to the "keystone to all real improvement in procedure—the personal appearance and examination of parties before the judge at the very first step in the cause." We are doubtful as to the full meaning of these words; but if they mean anything, it is probably this—the plaintiff, as soon as he has commenced an action, (or perhaps before commencing it), is to appear, and to compel the defendant to appear, before a judge (of a county court or of a superior court?) to be examined by him (upon oath?) as to the question pending between the parties; the plaintiff, as it were, taking the defendant by the throat and saying to him, "Pay me that thou owest." The judge, we presume, whatever may be the nature of the case, is then and there to adjudicate upon it without the intervention of a jury, and execution is of course to follow with like rapidity.

The pleading, we presume, is to be oral, as of old, so as to have the simplest as well as the most speedy system of jurisprudence. Thus, John Brown, the plaintiff, will say to the defendant Thomas Robinson, who has been dragged by the plaintiff and two policemen before a learned judge at chambers, "I claim of you, Robinson, five pounds for work and labour done at your request." To which the defendant will say, "Brown, I never was indebted, and I paid you your debt; and I further say, for defence on equitable grounds, that you told my wife you would forgive me the debt," &c.

Such are some of the results that may be anticipated from practical suggestions for legal reform, in the promotion of which the public are told they must not expect the co-operation of practising lawyers. They will be quite justified in not expecting it. Our reformers, not content with even American simplicity, would enable a judge alone—the press and the public, we suppose, excluded—to decide upon rights and obligations of the greatest importance to the people of this country. Yet this is but a sample of the reckless and worse than foolish language that is so often used with reference to law reform.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

MR. BARBER'S CASE.—We have much pleasure in informing our readers that this gentleman has been re-admitted to practise as an attorney. On the 21st inst. Lord Campbell, C. J., said, that after a careful consideration of the fresh evidence, the Court were of opinion that the rule for his re-admission should be made absolute.

THE STATUTE-LAW COMMISSION.

Among our extracts from the Appendix to the Report of the present commissioners we printed the whole of Mr. H. Bellenden Ker's "Observations on the Expurgatory List of Statutes ordered by the House of Commons to be printed on the 20th January, 1855," including some personal remarks which it would be unfair to leave without explanation. The printing of the Expurgatory List was ordered by the House on a motion by Mr. Locke King, whose zeal for the amendment of the law is very much greater than his knowledge or judgment; and Mr. Ker shews conclusively that the Expurgatory List was not worth printing. But in doing this he has not exercised his usual discretion, for he shews also that the instructions sanctioned by the Lord Chancellor and Mr. Ker, and framed by one of them, in exact accordance with which the Expurgatory List was prepared, were instructions for the devotion of the time of two of the late commissioners to the preparation of a list intended at the best as a "a hook of reference to accompany the Statutes at Large," but containing "a large proportion of matter which is of no use whatever for that or any other purpose; while, on the other hand, for the use indicated, it is extremely imperfect, and, to a certain extent, misleading;" so that "out of the 248 pages of which this work consists, 144 pages, or about three-fifths of the whole, are mere waste of paper and print."

In answer to Mr. Ker's remarks, Mr. Anstey, who with Mr. Rogers (now in Van Diemen's Land) prepared the Expurgatory List, sent to the commissioners a memorandum, dated the 20th July, 1855, which has been printed by order of the House of Commons. It is too long for insertion here, and indeed, as Mr. Ker observes upon it, it seems to be merely a defence against a charge that was never made. It certainly shews, that whether the list is or is not rigidly accurate in detail, the Lord Chancellor and Mr. Ker are alone responsible for the plan and instructions which have made it the useless and absurd thing Mr. Ker declares it to be.

Among Mr. Ker's observations, reprinted by us, (ante, p. 419), are also some statements respecting Mr. Coode's Digest of the Poor Laws, bearing on the face of them stronger indications of a wish to damage Mr. Coode's reputation than became either the writer or the occasion. Mr. Coode's replies to these have been printed by order of the House of Commons, (8th August, 1855, No. 472). We have only space for the following letter from that gentleman to the present commissioners:—

"13, Victoria-street, July 26, 1855.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I addressed you yesterday, in haste, a remonstrance against the publication, under your authority, of seven-teen misstatements made by Mr. Ker to my prejudice.

"I now forward to you two documents which will supply you with the means of judging of the extent to which your confidence in Mr. Ker, and your authority, have been abused in the publication in question.

"The first paper (inclosure No. 1) is a 'copy of correspondence,' to which Mr. Ker refers, in the beginning of his statement, in these terms—'The Digest of the Poor Laws in question was not originally prepared by Mr. Coode as one of the Commissioners of Statute Law; it was a work on which he had been engaged for many years previously, and which he had offered to the Poor-law Board, with a statement that it was then 'quite ready for the press,' on the 2nd of April, 1852. (See the correspondence on the subject which has been printed in the House of Commons Papers, 1852, No. 244).'

"Mr. Ker by these words, and those which follow, plainly imputes to me that I stated on the 2nd April, 1852, to the Poor-law Board, that the whole of the Digest of Poor Laws was then 'quite ready for the press;' which statement would have been an entire untruth; and Mr. Ker proceeds to shew, by his subsequent remarks, that such a statement could not possibly have been true.

"On referring to the correspondence thus cited by Mr. Ker, you will find (pp. 5, 6) that my statement expressly referred only to 'a part' of the Digest of Poor Laws—that, namely, which related to the law of settlement and removal, and which 'part' even was expressly stated to be imperfect, and only fit for the temporary purpose referred to in the correspondence; being, in fact, less than one-thirteenth part of the whole Digest.

* 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, s. 17. † 17 & 18 Vict. c. 16, s. 1.

‡ "Utroque litigantium, apparente in curiā, petens ipse loquelam suam et clameum ostendat in hunc modum—'Peto versus istum H., &c.' Auditā vero loquelā et clameo petentis, in electione ipsius tenentis erit, ac versus petentem defendere per duellum, &c.'" (Glan., lib. 2, c. 3). A breach of the peace that may be apprehended under the new system.

"You will see, on referring to the original passage, (p. 6), that this misstatement by Mr. B. Ker could not have been made by an oversight, for he fixes the date of the letter, (one out of three), and he selects these five words, 'quite ready for the press,' out of this sentence—'This part can be printed distinctly from the other parts of the Poor Law, and it is now quite ready for the press.'

"The second paper (inclosure No. 2) is a rough copy of my petition to the House of Commons, referred to in my letter of yesterday. This will display to you the facts, and part of the evidence by which the remaining sixteen out of seventeen of Mr. B. Ker's misstatements are to be refuted.

"As this copy is very rough, I request the favour, in case it is required to be printed, to be allowed to correct the proofs.

"I have &c.,
(Signed) "GEORGE COODE."

We cannot enter into the merits of this controversy beyond observing that the documents referred to fully justify Mr. Coode's complaint of the passage quoted in his letter from Mr. Ker's statement, beginning—"The Digest of the Poor Laws in question was not originally prepared by Mr. Coode as one of the commissioners," &c. In the meantime, in consequence of this unfortunate difference, the public has been deprived of the services of Mr. Coode, the only gentleman among the working members of the late or of the present commission who has shewn any peculiar aptitude for the business; indeed, we may say, the only member of the late commission who was not absolutely incompetent for the business; and the Digest of the Poor Laws—a work undoubtedly of great merit and utility, if the bulk agrees with the sample—remains unpublished and useless. When we observe that up to the present time neither the late nor the present commission has produced a single result either useful in itself or bearing promise of utility, we cannot help regretting that the dissensions of the late commissioners should have stifled the only work that might have saved the credit of the undertaking.

MARRIAGE OF A CLERGYMAN BY HIMSELF.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH, DUBLIN.

BEAMISH v. BEAMISH.—Nov. 16.

CRAMPTON, J., delivered the judgment of the Court in this interesting case. His Lordship commenced by observing that the case had been ably argued by counsel last term, and the questions raised were so novel and important that it stood over for the mature consideration of the Court until the present term. It had been heard in the absence of the Lord Chief Justice, and therefore it devolved upon him to deliver judgment. He (Crampton, J.) was glad to be enabled to say that it was an unanimous judgment, although, for the grounds upon which he rested it, he was alone responsible. The case came before the Court upon a special verdict, finding that the plaintiff brought an ejectment to recover certain lands in the county of Cork, a considerable estate, and he claimed to be entitled to the same as grandson and heir-at-law of Dr. John Swayne Beamish. The defendant denied the legitimacy of the plaintiff, and claimed as heir-at-law of Dr. Beamish; and such he undoubtedly was, unless the plaintiff's legitimacy was established. The facts as stated in the special verdict were these:—The late Dr. John Swayne Beamish was in his lifetime seised of considerable estates in fee-simple, and died on the 16th December, 1852. He had several sons, and the eldest was the Rev. Samuel Swayne Beamish, the defendant being the next brother of the latter. The Rev. Samuel Swayne Beamish was duly ordained a clergyman of the United Churches of England and Ireland, and it appeared that on the 27th November, 1832, being then in holy orders, he went to the house of Anne Lyons, in the city of Cork, and there performed a ceremony of marriage between himself and Isabella Frazer. The special verdict described the manner in which the ceremony took place, and the general form of solemnisation was that set out in the Book of Common Prayer of the United Churches of England and Ireland, Mr. Beamish then declaring that he took the said Isabella Frazer to be his wedded wife, she taking him to be her wedded husband. The wedding-ring was then placed upon her finger, and the blessing pronounced. After the ceremony, it was stated that the marriage was consummated between the parties. No clergyman was present at the performance of the ceremony except the Rev. Samuel Swayne Beamish himself, nor was any one present as a witness; but it was added, in the special verdict, that the performance of the ceremony was seen by Catherine Coffey, who, without the privacy of the parties to the marriage, witnessed it from an adjoining yard, but did not hear what passed. It was further stated that Isabella Frazer was a member of the Church of England. It further appeared that the Rev. Samuel Swayne Beamish, who thus celebrated this marriage, died intestate on the 8th April, 1844, and the plaintiff, who is now a minor, was his eldest son, begotten on the body of Isabella Frazer in January, 1841. He (Crampton, J.) had stated in minute detail, and almost in the words of the special verdict, the facts which had been found; and the question was, whether upon those facts the plaintiff was entitled to recover the lands the subject of the ejectment. With respect to the facts there could be no possible doubt, for they were the statements of both parties upon the record. If the plaintiff was the legitimate son of the Rev. Samuel Swayne Beamish, he was entitled as grandson of Dr. Beamish; if not, then the defendant was entitled as the second son of Dr. Beamish. The first question to be considered was, had there been used at the ceremony in question words of present contract, by which the Rev. Samuel Swayne Beamish and Isabella Frazer engaged to become husband and wife? Secondly, had there been a marriage ceremony performed according to the form prescribed by the Book of Common Prayer? Thirdly, was the marriage so solemnised consummated between the parties? Fourthly, what was the effect of the marriage ceremony, there being no other clergyman present? And, lastly, whether, although there was no witness regularly present, the facts stated in reference to Catherine Coffey constituted her a witness? It appeared to all the members of the Court who heard the case argued, that a valid, although an irregular and clandestine marriage, had been solemnised upon the day and year stated in the special verdict. It was quite unnecessary for him (Crampton, J.) to go into a consideration of the canon law, it having been so fully discussed in the course of the arguments; neither was it necessary to go into any review of the numerous cases upon the subject antecedent to Reg. v. Mills, (10 Cl. & Fin. 534). In that case the unanimous opinion of the English judges was delivered by that eminent judge, Tindal, C. J.; and he stated that by the law of England at the time of the passing of the Marriage Act a marriage ceremony by present words and contract was not valid unless in the presence and with the intervention of a minister in holy orders. The House of Lords adopted that opinion; and Parke, B., observed, in the case of Catherwood v. Cason, (13 M. & W. 264), that the judges were bound to obey this decision. Negatively, the case of Reg. v. Mills decided that a contract of marriage, however solemn, was not valid without the intervention of a minister in holy orders; and affirmatively it established, that where the two elements concurred, a contract of marriage in the present tense, and the intervention of a minister in orders, then the marriage was valid. The dissenting law Lords thought that the marriage was complete without any religious ceremony, having probably in view the Scottish law; for one of their Lordships had been born in Scotland, and another educated in the same country. It was manifest in the case now before the Court, that there was a serious intention on the part of the Rev. Samuel Swayne Beamish and Isabella Frazer to take each other as husband and wife, and to perform all the duties of that relationship; and in order to obtain the sanction of religion, a ceremony was performed by a minister of the church. It seemed to him, (Crampton, J.), after an attentive perusal of the judgment given by the law Lords, that they would have deemed the marriage in the present case to be a valid one, and that no particular form of religious ceremony was required if there was a religious ceremony which the parties who were married felt to be a ceremony invoking a religious obligation. The argument of the defendant's counsel was, that the minister who performed the ceremony appeared here to be the bridegroom himself, and that one of the functions of the minister was to be also a witness of what had taken place. No doubt it was very important that he should be a witness; but was the implication necessary, that he could not therefore dispense with the advantage resulting from this species of testimony? It had also been urged, that the ceremony prescribed in the Book of Common Prayer could not be in terms used upon such an occasion as the marriage of a minister by himself; and no doubt it would become necessary to change part of the language to make it suitable to such an occasion. But in answer to this it was urged, that the office of a minister was a religious office, and although he might be a witness to the ceremony, and a most important one, that was not his primary duty—that although it might be very important to have a person legally competent to attest the transaction, he was there in the first instance for the great purpose of performing a religious ceremony. As to the form prescribed in the Book of Common Prayer, there was a literal departure from it when the minister addressed himself on the occasion of partaking of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and he was authorised by the rubric to make such a change in the words; and he (Crampton, J.) might add, that although the rubric required the rite of baptism to be performed by a minister in orders, yet its performance by a layman did not avoid the act, and it was permissible for a layman to interpose in cases of emergency. An irregular and clandestine marriage was not therefore void, but the clergyman who celebrated such was subject to ecclesiastical censure. There was abundant authority as to the validity of clandestine and irregular marriages, both before ecclesiastical and common-law tribunals. A strong appeal had been made by the defendant's counsel upon the danger of countenancing clandestine marriages, and the consequences likely to arise from establishing such a doctrine. He agreed that an unscrupulous clergyman (and such were happily very few) might for his own base purposes exercise an improper influence, arising from his position; but such cases would be exceedingly rare. The argument constituted an appeal to the Legislature, and not to the Court, which was bound to pronounce what the law actually was. The judgment upon the special verdict should be for the plaintiff.

PERRIN, J., said he fully concurred in the able judgment just pronounced, and in the arguments by which it had been supported, save upon one point. He denied that Reg. v. Mills was an authority to bind the Court, because while three learned and eminent law Lords held one opinion, three as equally learned and distinguished pronounced an opinion the other way.

MOORE, J., concurred.

THE CENSUS IN CHINA, AND THE EFFECT OF AGE UPON THE CHINESE PENAL CODE.—In a letter on the population of China, recently sent by Sir John Bowring to the Registrar-General in London, he says—"The penal laws of China make provision for a general system of registration, [of the population], and corporal punishment, generally amounting to a hundred blows of the bamboo, is to be inflicted on those who neglect to make proper returns. The machinery is confided to the elders of the district, and the census is required to be annually taken; but I have no reason to believe the law is obeyed, or the neglect of it punished. . . . There are not only many establishments for the reception of the aged, but the penal code provides severe punishments for those who refuse to relieve the poor in their declining years. Age may also be pleaded in extenuation of crime and in mitigation of punishment."

THE JURIST.

LONDON, DECEMBER 1, 1855.

THE case of Mr. William Henry Barber has been frequently noticed in our pages; but a condensed history of it, now that his labours have at length been crowned with success, cannot fail to be interesting to our readers.

The narrative was sufficiently remarkable before the recent judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench; but it has now become more worthy of attention, as an example of the triumph which awaits importunity for right, and also of the desire which animates our judges to act justly towards those who appeal to them, however it may interfere with their previous judgments or their preconceived impressions. There is nothing more delightful than to contemplate a great act of justice, and the pleasure is, if possible, enhanced when we are aware that it must have been performed at some violence to the feelings, which may almost unconsciously have formed themselves into prejudices, and by reversing the effect of that which before has been decided by the same tribunal. In this country, so high is the character of our judges, so happy are we in the administration of justice, that, as a general rule, no suppliant need despair whose consciousness of innocence can support him through the terrible ordeals to which he will be subjected by the imputation of guilt.

Mr. Barber, after having served his articles with the Messrs. Scoones, of Tunbridge, practised as an attorney in London; and here, while his practice was gradually increasing, a Mr. Fletcher, a retired surgeon, of some property, residing at Camberwell, was introduced to him as a client. He employed Mr. Barber in drawing agreements, leases, &c. between him and his tenants, and in the course of such employment informed him, that he had been successful in tracing the rightful owners of unclaimed dividends in several instances, and had been rewarded for his trouble by receiving 5l. per cent. upon the amount recovered. He gradually introduced cases of this nature to the office of Mr. Barber, employing him to perform such services with respect to them as are required to be performed by a solicitor. During four years he brought, mixed up with other business, nine of these cases; five were genuine, four were fraudulent, the latter being supported by forgeries and falsehoods of the deepest dye. It was beyond all dispute that Fletcher's guilty accomplices were a wretched old woman of the name of Richards, who lived just long enough to complete the first fraud, her two daughters, Mrs. Dorey and Mrs. Sanders, and the husband of the latter, Mr. Sanders, a fishmonger in Bristol. This being clear, the only question was and has been, whether Mr. Barber was deceived by these artful criminals, or was himself a participator in their crime? He was one morning waited upon at his office by Mr. Freshfield, solicitor to the Bank of England, who, after introducing the subject, quickly assumed a threatening tone towards Mr. Barber, who thereupon declined to be led in the performance of his duties by his visitor. He had the misfortune to offend Mr. Freshfield by his answers. A week afterwards he was arrested on his way to his office, taken before a magistrate, and charged with uttering a forged will for the purpose of obtaining unclaimed dividends. He immediately sent for Fletcher, insisted upon his telling the whole truth and giving his evidence in open court, which very soon had the effect of transferring Fletcher to prison, but not, as had been anticipated, of releasing Mr. Barber.

In course of time, in April, 1844, (twelve years ago!), Fletcher, Mr. and Mrs. Sanders, Mrs. Dorey, and Mr. Barber were arraigned at the bar of the Old Bailey upon these charges. Mr. Barber applied for a separate trial, so that he might have the benefit of the evidence of those who stood by his side, and who alone could testify to what had passed between them. The application was refused. Mr. and Mrs. Sanders and Mrs. Dorey pleaded guilty. The trial of the first case (Stewart's) lasted three entire days, and resulted in the conviction of Fletcher, but in the acquittal of Mr. Barber. The next case that was taken, although the last in order of time, was Slack's case, and in this Mr. Barber was found guilty. The indictments in the other two cases (Burchard's and Hunt's) were not proceeded with. Barber was suddenly called upon to say why judgment should not be passed upon him, and then made a statement declaring his innocence, and charging Fletcher, who stood by him, with having deceived him to his ruin. He and Fletcher were sentenced to transportation for life; Sanders to transportation for seven years; Mrs. Sanders and Mrs. Dorey to two years' imprisonment. Barber and Fletcher were sent to the worst penal settlement, Norfolk Island, where Fletcher was made a clerk, and Barber was employed in cleaning out the wards of the convicts. Applications for his services as a clerk were refused, and he was intentionally subjected to indignities and cruelties, from which even Fletcher was exempt. At length, stretched upon a sick bed in the hospital of Norfolk Island, he wrote a memorial to the British Government, which, however, was long kept back by the authorities of the island. Fletcher, as well as Sanders, had now made public confessions of their guilt, and of Barber's entire innocence. There was, however, no mode open to him of laying these facts before the Government, or of obtaining a favourable response to them. But stricken, prostrate, as he was, he was not utterly forsaken. Those peaceful, beneficent agencies were at work, which, rising gradually from the under-current to the surface of life, bring hope and succour to the desolate and the oppressed. A most excellent man, the Rev. T. B. Naylor, (chaplain of Norfolk Island), had become deeply impressed with a belief in Barber's innocence. He it was who thus alluded to his sufferings, and the fortitude with which they were endured:—"I have never known a prisoner of the Crown who has been subjected to greater wretchedness. I rejoice to be able to add, that I have never seen an instance of more dignified suffering, accompanied by invariably consistent conduct. It will afford me real pleasure to continue his acquaintance under happier circumstances*." It was this most estimable clergyman who, in a letter addressed to Lord Stanley in 1846, said, "I am certain that if there were any mode of appeal, I could establish Barber's innocence; and so painfully do I feel the misery of his condition that I would in that case make a voyage to England for the purpose of doing so; for the thought perpetually haunts me that Barber is undeservedly undergoing the fate of a convict at Norfolk Island, and I cannot shake off the distress it occasions me." Unable himself to take the voyage thus suggested, he actually sent Mrs. Naylor, with her infant child, to England with Mr. Barber's papers, and then for the first time the memorial and documents supporting it were read, an investigation was instituted in this country, and Mrs. Naylor returned with a letter from the Secretary of State, acquainting the reverend gentleman that the result of the inquiry was satisfactory, and a pardon would be sent out. Accordingly a pardon—conditional upon his not returning to Great Britain or Ireland—was received by Mr. Barber in April, 1847. He was at this time with Fletcher and other prisoners at Impression Bay, in Tasmania. This event, and its immediate results, shall be given in his own words:—

"Joyful was this news to my suffering mind. I was nevertheless in an awkward dilemma. The superintendent accompanied the intelligence by saying, 'You must give in your prison clothing, and proceed to Hobart Town, where you will receive the necessary document.' 'With what clothes,' said I, 'shall I be furnished to travel in?' (for not one article had I of my own). 'I have no orders,' said he, 'about that.' The principal communication between Hobart Town and Impression Bay was by water; but as the conditional pardon came unaccompanied by any authority for a free passage, I was unable to obtain one. By land it was about ninety miles, through an almost untrodden region—a gum-tree wilderness, without, for the greater part, any roads, except a slight kind of sheep track, at many places quite effaced by heavy rains; but go I must; and for aught that the Government provided for me, under such extraordinary circumstances, I might have wandered to Hobart Town naked and without food. My miserable fellow-prisoners, however, had more compassion upon me, and clubbed together such few odd articles of wearing apparel as they happened to possess; and I gladly do the superintendent and the religious instructor the justice to say, that they eked out the charity of those whose fellow-captive I had so long been, sufficiently to enable me to set out upon my journey—a wandering mendicant round the earth—having the fixed resolve to proceed, by the blessing of Providence, to Paris, (a distance of 20,000 miles), there to renew my never-ceasing struggle for justice. I sometimes travelled thirty miles of that weary, though welcome, journey without seeing a person from whom I could inquire the way. Knowing, however, the geographical position of Hobart Town, the sun served as my compass by day, and the stars by night. My course sometimes lay by the sea-coast, but oftener 'deep in the wood's embrace,' as I emerged from which the scenery was often sublimely beautiful. After crossing mountains and fording streams, I in three days and three nights reached Tasmania's capital. Had a stage harlequin suddenly made his appearance, he could scarcely have attracted more attention than I did in my motley, ill-fitting suit. I was, however, soon metamorphosed. I there found the Rev. Mr. Rogers, the late chaplain of Norfolk Island, who generously received and maintained me at his own house for two months."

As soon as his case had been fully inquired into, a subscription was raised in order to enable Mr. Barber to proceed to Sydney. He arrived there after a voyage of ten days, and there also a very handsome sum was subscribed for him, chiefly by the judges, barristers, and solicitors. He then took ship for China, driven to adopt that circuitous route in order to avoid the British coast. He proceeded to Canton, where he had a very narrow escape from assassination. He then sailed for Madras, where he arrived on the 20th January, 1848, after having been nearly shipwrecked in a dead calm, the current setting direct towards that dangerous sunken rock known to mariners as Pedro Branca, at the entrance to Singapore*. At Madras he was received with cordiality and kindness, a munificent subscription was raised for him, and on the 14th February he resumed his journey, and, by the route of Egypt and Trieste, reached Paris on the 4th May. His first step was to lay his papers before the Marquis of Normanby, by whom they were transmitted to the Government; and in the following November he received at Paris his full and unconditional pardon. He now lost no time in proceeding to England, and although he had never been struck off the roll of attorneys and solicitors, it was necessary for him to apply for permission to take out his certificate, as more than twelve months had elapsed since he had done so.

Accordingly, in January, 1849, the application was made; it was opposed by the Incorporated Law Society, and referred to a Master of the Court; in July, 1850, judgment was given refusing the certificate. In May, 1851, the application was renewed, but unsuccessfully. It was now that important evidence came to light, comprising two long statements by William Sanders, made by him for the information of his attorney previously to his trial, and a statement by Mrs. Dorey, made for the same purpose. By following up the information contained in these documents, further evidence was obtained, all tending to corroborate Mr. Barber's statements from the time of his trial to the period of their discovery. Fortified by these welcome auxiliaries, another application was made by Mr. Barber, in May, 1853, to the Master of the Rolls, but he was referred back to the Queen's Bench. To that Court again he went; in last Easter Term a rule nisi was granted on his behalf, and on the 21st November, 1855, the rule was made absolute for the re-admission of Mr. Barber. Thus, after the lapse of twelve years since his conviction, Mr. Barber resumes his place in society, his conviction annulled, his sentence remitted, his professional status restored.

Twelve precious years have been spent in outward wretchedness and disgrace—twelve years have been struck out of a professional career at the time when he was pursuing it was in the prime of life, and advancing towards success. Is there no remedy for this—no compensation from society for the grievous wrongs which it inflicts upon the innocent man convicted? We trust there may be, and in the meantime heartily congratulate Mr. Barber upon his complete vindication, and wish him all prosperity in his renewed vocation.

The Lawyer's Companion for 1856. Edited by W. F. FINLASON, Esq., Barrister at Law. (Continued annually). [Stevens & Norton.]

THIS useful work has become more useful under the careful and industrious editorship of Mr. Finlason, and a glance at its contents will shew how worthy it is of being the companion of a practical and practising lawyer. It contains—

A law calendar for the year.

A retrospective calendar for four previous years.

The sittings of the Courts in and out of term.

Rules as to time, and tables shewing the time for taking steps in suits in law, equity, and bankruptcy.

The offices of the courts—their hours and their holidays.

Costs and fees in Common-law, Chancery, Bankruptcy, and County Courts.

Recent cases as to practice.

Useful forms in legal proceedings, affidavits, attestations, notices, &c.

Tables of stamp duties.

Tables for computing costs, calculating discount, interest, &c.

Rules for the admission of attorneys.

Index to statutes of practical utility, from the 1 Geo. 4 to last session.

A London and provincial law directory.

A diary for 1856, with memoranda as to legal business.

Recent cases bearing upon these subjects have been carefully collected, and the forms have been recast under the Common-law Procedure Acts of 1852 and 1854.

The index to practical statutes from 1 Geo. 4 to 1856 has been compiled expressly for the work by the editor, and will be found very useful. One of the tables relating to costs shews at a glance the amount of the fractional parts of a bill of costs.

The Summary Procedure on Bills of Exchange Act, 1855, (18 & 19 Vict. c. 67); with an Introduction, Explanatory Notes, and Index. Second Edition, including the New Rule as to Costs. By O. B. C. HARRISON, Esq., Barrister at Law. [Wildy & Sons, 1855.]

WE formerly called attention to the main provisions of this statute, (ante, p. 389), which has been rendered almost a dead letter by reason of the blunder in omitting all mention of costs from the indorsement on the writ of summons, and of its being still open to suitors to adopt the old in preference to the new system. The editor states that the omission to which we have just referred arose from a mistake in the draft of the bill when before Parliament. The question whether a sum for costs may be indorsed, notwithstanding the defect in the act, was recently pending before the Court of Exchequer, and has just been set at rest by a Rule of Court. (See post, p. 464). Mr. Harrison also points out a mistake in the notice subscribed to the writ, stating, that "if the defendant do not obtain leave from one of the judges of the courts within twelve days after having been served with this writ, inclusive of the day of such service, to appear thereto, and do" ("not" omitted) "within such time cause an appearance to be entered" &c., the plaintiff may sign final judgment. This is also set right by the Rule just alluded to. He agrees with the views which we formerly expressed, that the act does not apply to persons out of the jurisdiction of the Courts, (p. 15), and that the blank in the indorsement on the writ should be filled up with the word "four," so as to make the proceedings liable to be stayed on payment of the debt within "four days." This is now ordered by the Rule of Court.

The few cases decided under the act are collected, (including Knight v. Pocock, 1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1022), and altogether it is a useful little manual upon the subject of which it treats.

FIRST ANNUAL REPORT OF THE DIRECTORS.

THE Directors have much pleasure in submitting to the Shareholders the Balance-sheet of the Company, feeling sure that the results thereby developed will be received with a high degree of satisfaction as regards the past, and warrant the most sanguine expectations for the future. It may, in truth, be said (and the accounts are the best evidence of the fact) that the Law Union already occupies an important position among insurance companies, and the confidence manifested in it by the public as a modern office may be said to be almost unprecedented in the history of similar institutions.

The Law Union was completely registered in April, 1854, and the Shareholders need scarcely be reminded that some months subsequently to that period were necessarily employed in making preliminary arrangements for the transaction of business; so that, practically speaking, the operations of the Company may be considered as limited to twelve months.

The success of the Company is shewn by the simple fact, that its present income exceeds 10,000*l.* per annum.

The new business received from the 1st ultimo to this day is as follows—viz. in the Fire Department, 356 Proposals, insuring 204,095*l.*; and in the Life Department, 61 Proposals, insuring 23,895*l.*; being a considerable increase upon the average of the business during the same period of last year.

Of the One Hundred Thousand Shares, of 10*l.* each, into which the Company's Capital of One Million is divided, nearly Eighty-four Thousand have been allotted, and the first call on every such allotment has been paid.

The Directors have not adopted the usual practice of giving a commission or allowance on the allotment of shares, but, on the contrary, they have issued some of the shares at premiums, which appear in the accounts to the credit of the Company.

The Directors would be overlooking a point of great moment were they not to draw attention to the number, influence, and position of the Proprietary. The Company is supported by more than Five Hundred Shareholders, almost all of whom are members of the Legal Profession, while others are connected with the management of estates, and bring with them considerable business.

In consequence of the prosperous state of the Company's affairs, the Directors, by a resolution unanimously adopted at a monthly meeting, were enabled to recommend that the reimbursement of the preliminary expenses (all of which have been liquidated) should be extended over a term of five years only, in lieu of the more usual period of ten years.

It is well known that many insurance companies have erred in not making a reserve of Shares to secure connexions which the offer of Shares alone could command; the Directors have, therefore, reserved several thousand Shares, which they are willing to allot to Solicitors able to transact business with the Company, in such numbers as may from time to time be thought desirable, at par; but to no other persons, (with the exception of a few to members of the Bar or of the Medical Profession, or to Land Agents), unless at a premium of twenty-five per cent. on the first call, which premium has already in some cases been paid. It may be observed, that, had not this rule been adopted, the reserved Shares would long since have been eagerly taken up by the non-professional public.

The Board has the gratification of adding that a great many of the Shareholders have redeemed the promise made on the allotment of Shares, that they would transact some business with the Company; and with regard to those who have not yet been enabled to do so, the Directors have confidence in their endeavours during the ensuing year.

While on this part of their Report, the Directors may be allowed to make a remark, (which cannot be too often repeated), that if every Shareholder would make up his mind to complete at least one Life and several Fire proposals in the course of each year, the results to the Company would be immense, while the individual exertion to attain that end would be comparatively small. The effect of such a system has already been experienced by several Companies whose Shares are now at a very large premium; so that, both as regards the value of the Shareholders' capital, and the annual dividends receivable therefrom, the investments in such Companies are of the most safe and advantageous description.

To add to the value of the Shares of the Law Union in a like degree, and in a solid and permanent manner, is, and will continue to be, a principal object of the Directors in the management of the affairs of the Company; while, by availing themselves of all the modern improvements in the principles and conduct of Insurance business, they secure to the insured greater advantages, combined with the prospect of a larger bonus, than many existing companies.

It has been suggested to the Directors that it would be desirable to select a position for the Offices of the Law Union in a more central situation, and nearer to the neighbourhood of the Inns of Court, which subject is under their consideration.

It is right to state, with reference to the preliminary and law expenses of establishing this Company, that the promoters (although they devoted much time to that object) declined to accept any compensation whatever beyond their mere travelling expenses; and that as regards the Solicitor, Mr. Durrant, who co-operated with them in originating the Company, and contributed throughout to its development, it was suggested that no bill of costs should be made out, (which would have come to a very large sum), but that he should receive, in lieu of his professional charges, a fee of 400*l.*, which it is gratifying to us to state that he willingly agreed to, and such payment was, by order of the Board, made to him accordingly.

The Directors, on the suggestion of a large number of Shareholders, unanimously resolved to make a payment in the month of April last, after the rate of 4*l.* per cent. per annum, to the Shareholders, which interest (dating from the time when each Shareholder paid his first call, and calculated up to the 30th of September last) the Directors now recommend should be paid to every Shareholder, including those who have subscribed since the 31st of March, 1855. There will remain, after deducting the amount so paid, a considerable sum to the credit of the Company, solely arising from the interest on the paid-up capital, and irrespective of the profits derived from the business of the Company. The Directors further recommend that a Dividend out of Profits shall be declared when the first call on the reserved Shares (which there is no doubt will quickly be advantageously allotted) shall have been paid, and that until that time only the interest receivable from the investment of the paid-up Capital shall be divided. This arrangement will have the advantage of placing all the Shareholders on the same footing in respect of dividend.

In conclusion, it may be observed, that the success which has attended the operations of the Law Union has been achieved notwithstanding the depressing effect of the present war, and is a strong proof of the power and efficiency of the Proprietary, and of the connexions of the Company.

The Directors who retire according to the Deed of Settlement are as follows, namely—JAMES ALEXANDER DOUGLAS, Esq.; JOHN DABBS, Esq.; JOHN HOWARD, Esq.; R. J. SISSON, Esq.; HENRY MASON, Esq.; CHARLES JOHN WHISHAW, Esq.; JOHN BATTEN, Esq.; J. F. ROBINSON, Esq.; H. E. MARSH, Esq.; JOHN COLE, Esq.; JOHN LAMBERT, Esq.; and H. TREMENEERE JOHNS, Esq. The retiring Auditors are FRANCIS WORSLEY and W. H. GREY, Esqrs.

The above-named Directors, and Mr. Francis Worsley, Auditor, are eligible, and offer themselves for re-election.

WILLIAM FOSTER, Chairman.

Chief Offices, 45, Pall-mall, Nov. 23, 1855.

At the Annual General Meeting of the Proprietors, held at the Company's Chief Offices, the foregoing Report of the Board of Directors having been read, was unanimously adopted, and ordered to be printed in "The Times" newspaper.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, DECEMBER 8, 1855.

THE recent case of Raby v. Ridehalgh (reported 1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 363, and somewhat more fully 3 Eq. Rep. 901) deserves particular notice. The principle on which it proceeded is equally clear and satisfactory, but at first sight there would seem to be some difficulty in applying that principle to the facts of the case; and as it is one of great importance with regard to the duties of trustees for investment, it may be useful to consider what appear to have been the grounds on which the Court considered that it ought to be so applied. The case is one not unlikely to be the subject of some misapprehension, and to be understood as deciding more than the Court appears to have intended to decide.

The suit was instituted for the purpose of making trustees liable for loss occasioned by improper investments of a trust fund bequeathed to them, upon trust, as to one moiety, for J. S. Raby for life, with remainder to his children; and as to the other moiety, for W. Raby for life, with remainder to his children, without any directions whatever as to investment. The trustees invested on insufficient mortgages, and a considerable loss ensued. The children of J. S. Raby were the plaintiffs. The Master, in answer to an inquiry directed by the decree, after stating what the securities were, and that they were improper investments, proceeded to state that he did not find that any of the particular investments were made at the instance or request, or with the authority, of either of the tenants for life; but he found that it had been the intention of the trustees to invest in the funds, and that at the instance and request of the tenants for life, who wished to secure as large an income as they could, this intention had been abandoned, and that it was at their instance or request arranged that the monies should be invested on mortgage, so as to secure a higher rate of interest than could have been obtained from an investment in the funds. He further found that Robinson, who was employed by the trustees about the mortgage transactions, was employed by them and acted with the general privity and concurrence of the tenants for life, who knew that mortgages were being taken under his advice, and were in the habit of seeing or communicating with him.

By a decretal order made by Sir J. Stuart, V. C., on subsequent further directions, the trustees were declared liable to make good the loss arising from the deficiency of the securities, and the surviving tenant for life, the estate of the deceased tenant for life, and their respective life interests in the trust estate were declared liable to indemnify the trustees. It was ordered that J. S. Raby, the surviving tenant for life, and the executrix of W. Raby, the deceased tenant for life, should pay to the trustees the sum for which the latter were held liable, accounts of W. Raby's estate being directed in case the executrix should not admit assets. The dividends payable to J. S. Raby were impounded for effecting the recouping. The trustees did not appeal, but

J. S. Raby appealed, contending, that though he had requested the trustees to invest on mortgage, he had in no way sanctioned their investing on insufficient mortgages; that he, therefore, had not been privy to a breach of trust, and was not liable to indemnify the trustees. Sir G. J. Turner, L. J., who delivered the judgment of the Court, declined to decide the general question whether trustees, in the absence of any directions as to the mode of investment, could safely lend on mortgage, but said, that, assuming them to have authority to do so, it was clear that in so doing they were bound to act with a view to the rights and interests of all the cestuis que trust, and that if they made such an investment at the instance and for the benefit of some of them, without regard to the interests of the others, they were liable for any loss that might ensue. He considered, that under the circumstances found by the Master, and stated above, the investment on mortgage was clearly improper, and that the tenants for life, who had persuaded the trustees to make it, had by so doing induced them to commit a breach of trust, and were liable to indemnify them.

It is evident that this decision does not at all turn on the fact of the mortgages being of such a character that the trustees would not under any circumstances have been justified in lending money upon them. It was not established that the tenants for life had concurred in the particular investments, and it must therefore have been held that an improper act was done, independently of the fact that the securities were in themselves bad; nor does the judgment appear to ground itself at all on the concurrence of the tenants for life in taking bad securities. The Court held that the trustees had been guilty of a breach of trust in not exercising an honest discretion as to the mode of investment. Sir J. L. Knight Bruce, L. J., in the course of the argument in Baud v. Fardell, (Nov. 13, 1855), said, "The decision in Raby v. Ridehalgh turned on this, that the trustees had not exercised their own discretion, but had allowed themselves to be swayed by the intreaties of the tenants for life to adopt a course advantageous to them, but not to the other cestuis que trust;" and it may also clearly be collected from the judgment of Sir G. J. Turner, L. J., in the present case, that this was the ground on which the Court went.

It is not stated in the judgment whether the decision would have been the same if the trustees had been empowered in the ordinary way to invest in government or real securities. It is apprehended, however, that it would. The decision proceeds on the ground that it was proved that the trustees did not exercise a fair discretion; and where this fact is affirmatively established against trustees, it would seem impossible to hold that the existence of an express discretionary power exonerates them from liability. The only legitimate effect of such a power appears to be to exempt trustees from being answerable for the unfortunate consequences of an act done in the honest exercise of their discretion, but which without such power would be so far out of the line of their duty, that honesty of intention would not exonerate them from their liability for its consequences.

If this view be correct, the case is of the more importance, as it becomes applicable to the most ordinary case, that of trustees clothed with a discretionary power as to investments; and it seems at first sight to involve the consequence, that trustees who invest on mortgage at the request of tenants for life are responsible for any consequential loss, and that the tenants for life are bound to indemnify them.

A rule of this kind would certainly be somewhat alarming. The natural inclination of trustees is to invest in Consols, that being the course which involves least trouble and responsibility; and probably, when there are adult tenants for life, a different mode of investment is seldom resorted to, except at their request. It would be very severe to hold that the complying with such request makes the trustees guilty of a breach of trust, and that the request amounts to a solicitation to commit a breach of trust. It must be observed, that the increase of present income may be a very legitimate motive for preferring one mode of investment to another; for it is in reality a benefit to those entitled in remainder, where, as in Raby v. Ridehalgh, they are the infant children of the tenants for life.

It is apprehended, however, that the Court did not intend to lay down a rigid rule of this nature. The decision in Stretton v. Ashmall (3 Drew. 9) negatives the existence of such a rule, and it is apprehended that that case may well stand together with Raby v. Ridehalgh. The question in all such cases is one of fact, whether an honest discretion has been exercised; and in order to arrive at a sound conclusion on this question all the circumstances must be looked to. The present case was one of grave suspicion as against the tenants for life, the Master's report having only just stopped short of finding them privy to all the particular investments, and having stated circumstances causing a suspicion, approaching as nearly as suspicion can approach to certainty, that if Robinson, who negotiated the investments, had been living, his evidence would have established that they were so privy. In a contest, then, between the tenants for life and the trustees, the Court might reasonably construe the undisputed finding of the Master most strongly as against the tenants for life, and take it as saying, in effect, "The trustees, in the exercise of their discretion, came to the conclusion, that, under the circumstances of the case, an investment in the funds was the fair and proper one; but they allowed themselves to be persuaded by the tenants for life to adopt a course contrary to their own judgment, for the purpose of benefiting the tenants for life." And the Court might reasonably draw the further conclusion, that the tenants for life knew that the trustees were, in compliance with their intreaties, acting against their own deliberate judgment, and without regard to the interests of the infants entitled in remainder.

If this be a correct view of the grounds on which the judgment proceeded, it is evident that the principle of the decision would not apply to a case where a trustee, who had intended to invest in the funds, is induced, by the representations of the tenant for life, to reconsider his determination, and then, in the bona fide exercise of his discretion, comes to the conclusion that an investment on mortgage is more for the benefit of the family. At the same time, this decision is a beacon to trustees, and should serve as a warning against any tendency to deviate from the course of holding an even balance between the interests of the cestuis que trust. It seems clear, that if the mortgages had been perfectly good when taken, and had afterwards become bad through accidental circumstances, for which trustees properly investing on mortgage would not be answerable, the trustees must still have been liable for the loss, on the ground that it was an improper motive that led them to invest on mortgage at all.

The case is also of interest as defining how far the right of a defaulting trustee to be indemnified by a cestui que trust who has induced him to commit the breach of trust will be enforced in a suit instituted by the other cestuis que trust to have the breach made good. The Vice-Chancellor ordered repayment by J. S. Raby, and the executrix of W. Raby, to the trustees, of the whole loss with which the trustees were charged; but on appeal it was held that this went too far. By the order on appeal the life interest of J. S. Raby was impounded for the purpose of recouping the trustees; but the order against J. S. Raby and the executrix of W. Raby for payment was confined to the amount of the sums received by the tenants for life respectively from the income of the improper investments. No case was cited in which the Court had in such a case made an order for repayment to the trustee by a co-defendant personally; and Sir G. J. Turner, L. J., during the argument, treated the point as novel. Such a decree had, however, been made by the Master of the Rolls in Hood v. Clapham, (19 Beav. 90), and though such a course appears to be a departure from the rule against making a decree between co-defendants, it has the recommendation of doing complete justice and preventing multiplicity of suits, and does not appear likely to be attended by any practical inconvenience. The case now under consideration is valuable as giving the sanction of the Court of Appeal to decrees of this nature, and settling the limit beyond which the direction for repayment ought not to extend.

INNS OF COURT COMMISSION.

REPORT.

MAY it please your Majesty,—Your Majesty's commissioners commenced their inquiry by ascertaining the revenues applicable to the promotion of the study of the law and jurisprudence.

In the prosecution of this portion of their inquiry, your commissioners desire to state that they have received every assistance from the several treasurers, principals, sub-treasurers, stewards, and other officers of the different inns of court and of Chancery.

With regard to the inns of Chancery, we do not find that there exist any means of rendering their funds available to the promotion of the study of the law. These inns have in some instances become private property, and in others are heavily indebted, whilst in no instance have we been able to trace such an appropriation of the funds as to fix upon the inns a legal liability to contribution to any general professional purpose.

With regard to the four inns of court, namely, the Inner and Middle Temples, Lincoln's-inn, and Gray's-inn, it appears that the property now belonging to the Inner and Middle Temples respectively was formerly held by them under the Earl of Lancaster, the Hospitallers of St. John, and the Crown successively, at a rent—probably fee-farm—of 10*l.* for each society, from the year 1315, (temp. Edward II), to the reign of James I, from whom they afterwards accepted a charter, by which the same property was granted to the two societies at the same rent, which was afterwards purchased by them from the Crown about the year 1673. This charter, reciting "that the inns of the Inner and Middle Temples, London, being two out of those four colleges the most famous of all Europe," were dedicated to the study of the law, further contained the following provision—"which said inns, messuages, &c., for ourselves, our heirs, and successors, we strictly command shall serve for the entertainment and education of the students and professors of the laws aforesaid residing in the same inns for ever."

The earliest muniments of title of Lincoln's-inn and Gray's-inn afford no evidence of any grant from the Crown; and in fact the property of these inns appears to have been acquired by purchase made by the members of the inn, nor is there a trace of its being held upon any trust.

None of the inns are corporate bodies; they are merely voluntary societies; and a great part of their income is still derived from the contributions of the members.

We conceive that as regards the Temples, a direct trust arises by the acceptance of the grant made by James I; and in justice to the benchers, who form the governing body of each inn of court, we are bound to observe, that there is every disposition on their part to render the funds of the societies available for the purpose of education of the students, whether such trust exist or not.

And we can state with confidence of all the four inns, not only that we have found no trace of the misapplication of these funds to the personal advantage of individual benchers, but, on the contrary, we recognise creditable instances of disinterestedness and public spirit displayed in the relinquishment of considerable fees heretofore payable to benchers holding offices in the inns.

From the accounts supplied and the explanations furnished to us by the treasurers and sub-treasurers of the several inns of court, we have made out a classified comparative statement of the income and expenditure of the four inns of court; and we have subjoined a table of the income and expenditure of each inn for the year 1854, and, having compared it with the average income and expenditure of the last three years, find that, subject to slight alterations, it sufficiently represents such average. The income of the Middle Temple has fallen off to the extent of 247*6*l. 1*9*s. 11*d.* below the average of the last three years; and to obtain a fair average of the income of Gray's-inn, that should be augmented by adding to the amount of 8343*l.* 4*s.* 8*d.* one-seventh of the fines received by that inn every seventh year for the renewal of leases, which, on an average of the last seven years, may be taken to amount to 773*l.*

The apparently large amounts of rents received by Lincoln's-inn and the Inner Temple, and of rents and dividends received by the Middle Temple, might lead to the formation of an exaggerated estimate of the resources derivable from the property of these bodies. The necessary outgoings, however, incidental to property of this peculiar character are very large, and leave but a limited net income to the inns of court. In the case of Lincoln's-inn, although the rents and incidental receipts from their property have for the last year (1854) amounted to the sum of 18,242*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.*, yet it must be borne in mind that the inn is incumbered with a debt amounting at present to 40,000*l.*, incurred in respect of erecting a new hall and library. If we deduct also the expenditure for repairs, insurance, rates, taxes, watching, lighting, the hall, the salaries of the establishment, (exclusive of the chapel and library), and the interest of the debt, the remainder of the income of their property only amounted to 4548*l.* 19*s.* 5*d.*, whilst the expenses of the chapel and library amounted to 651*l.* 15*s.* 4*d.*. This inn provides courts for the Lord Chancellor and the three Vice-Chancellors gratuitously, and a court for the Lords Justices at a small rent. The sittings of these courts at Lincoln's-inn, no doubt, adds considerably to the value of the property there.

In like manner, in the case of the Middle Temple, although the rents and dividends, &c. amounted to 10,192*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.*, yet the outgoings for repairs, insurance, rates, taxes, &c., and establishment, came to 8932*l.* 6*s.*, leaving a remainder of 1259*l.* 2*s.* 9*d.*, which is expended on the chapel and library. Moreover, a very heavy demand will shortly arise in consequence of the great age and consequent dilapidation of many portions of their buildings.

The Inner Temple is less unfavourably circumstanced. The large rental of 15,227*l.* 0*s.* 3*d.*, with the payments from members, amounting to 5941*l.* 15*s.* 9*d.*, after deducting for repairs, and for rates, taxes, watching, lighting, establishment, and for annuities chargeable on the property, leaves still a surplus of 6934*l.* 3*s.* 5*d.*, and the chapel and library expenses do not amount to 1800*l.*; nevertheless the repairs are annually very heavy; the society has only recently paid off a large building debt, and ere long a considerable outlay will be again required for rebuilding part of the property.

The property of Gray's-inn is far less than that of the other inns of court; and it is not probable that any considerable amount of surplus income can be derived from that source beyond their present contribution to the funds provided for the readers, as after mentioned in our report.

It is impossible not to feel some disappointment that such a large amount of gross revenue as arises from the other three inns of court should leave so small an available net revenue; and, having regard to the great value of the site of these institutions, a doubt arises whether some mode might not be devised of rendering their property more productive, without departing from the purposes for which these societies were formed.

We may observe that the chambers in some instances are held by private individuals for life, with a power of assigning them to other parties on payment of a small fine to the inn.

It might be possible also to aid the revenues of the Inner and Middle Temples and Gray's-inn by a prospective modification of the arrangement under which the benchers pay a very large fee upon admission, and acquire in turn a life interest in a set of chambers. This regulation, by which a certain number of chambers is appropriated to the use of benchers, is of a very ancient date, and there is no record of the precise origin of the practice; yet it appears that the number of chambers now appropriated in that manner is the same as in the reign of Elizabeth; nor does the number appear ever to have been increased; but it acts unequally on benchers of different ages, some of whom never arrive at this advantage. It is, perhaps, not clear that any serious loss has arisen from the difference between the rents of the chambers and the income derived from the payment of fees on admission; and even if such were the case, it might not be regarded as an unreasonable privilege to be awarded to those who have long contributed by annual payments to the support of the inn. But, on the whole, we do not conceive that the arrangement is satisfactory, the advantage, if any, to any particular bencher being a matter of chance.

The other source of the income of the inns of court is the fees payable by their respective members.

The annual and special payments demanded from the members of the respective inns differ materially in nature and amount, but, after deducting the stamp duties, they cannot be regarded as seriously burthensome on the student, except where his means are very limited.

For convenience we subjoin here a comparative statement of the principal fees:—

Students' fees, admission.—Inner Temple, 10*l.* 5*s.* 2*d.*; Middle Temple, 7*l.* 10*s.* (2*l.* 10*s.* library); Lincoln's Inn, 5*l.* 2*s.* 10*d.*; Gray's-inn, 8*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.*

Periodical payment by students keeping terms.—Inner Temple, 4*l.* 5*s.* for dinners for four terms, and the student is entitled to dine six days per term; 16*s.* 4*d.* pensions and preacher's duties, charged to those who do not dine. Middle Temple, 4*l.* 4*s.* per annum; 1*l.* for ditto. Lincoln's-inn, commons, 5*l.* 16*s.* per annum; chapel, 15*s.* 4*d.* per annum; gowns, 6*s.* per annum. Gray's-inn, 16*l.* 16*s.* for twelve terms; 3*l.* preacher's roll; 3*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* exercises.

Annual payment by barristers.—Inner Temple, 19*s.* 8*d.*; Middle Temple, 1*l.*; Lincoln's-inn, 3*l.* 15*s.* 10*d.*; Gray's-inn, 1*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*

The funds thus collected from the members of the inns of court, and the net income arising from their property, are expended mainly on five objects, namely, the establishment, the chapel, the library, the hall, and the dinners therein; the contribution to educational purposes, superintended by the Council of Legal Education, more fully referred to in the subsequent part of our report.

We have already adverted to the expenditure on the chapel and library. That incurred in respect of the former may possibly admit of revision and reduction.

The expenditure on the hall dinners, &c. appears to call for further observation.

We believe that considerable advantage might be made to accrue to the Profession generally, and especially the students, from their dining together not unfrequently in hall. It has become all the more important to provide opportunities for this social intercourse, since, owing to a change in the habits of the times, the members of the inns of court have to a great degree ceased to reside in their precincts or vicinity. The barristers also of the common law and equity courts no longer meet at Westminster Hall.

The existing arrangements for keeping terms, by dining in hall a certain number of times in each term, and the payment by the members of the inns of court of a fixed sum for a definite number of dinners, whether they partake of them or not, creates to some extent an obligation and inducement to dine in hall.

The result we have before us, shewing the number of students, barristers, and benchers who have dined in the several halls in 1854.

Inner Temple, 1854.—Benchers, 854; barristers, 1783; students, 3150: total, 5685. Middle Temple, 1854.—Benchers, 93; barristers, 372; students, 355: total, 820. Lincoln's-inn, 1854.—Benchers, 824; barristers, 5227; students, 7797: total, 13,848. Gray's-inn, 1854.—Benchers, 712; barristers, 1168; students, 1325: total, 3205.

The expenses incidental to the halls and dinners, including the establishment requisite, and the expenses of the Parliament chamber for the year 1854, were—for Inner Temple, 4248*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.*; for Middle Temple, 3310*l.* 6*s.* 11*d.*; for Lincoln's-inn, 5303*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.*; for Gray's-inn, 1925*l.* 19*s.* 3*d.*

We think it right to draw attention to the total number of students dining in the several halls, under the present system, and to the expenditure above stated on the halls, kitchens, and Parliament chambers, and likewise to the great difference which exists between the numbers who dine at the several inns as compared with the expenditure on these objects; but we feel assured that when these statements come under the consideration of the governing bodies of the inns, they will make any modifications of the existing arrangements which may be calculated to render them more efficient towards the end in view—that is to say, promoting the association of the students; and that, subject to this, any savings will be applied towards the purposes of education. The benchers of Lincoln's-inn some years ago revised and considerably reduced this head of expenditure. Indeed, this subject appears to have engaged the attention of the benchers of the Inner Temple before the appointment of the present commission, and considerable reductions in this branch of their expenditure seem to have been resolved upon already.

The actual surplus of income and expenditure of Lincoln's-inn and the Temples for the year 1854 is as follows:—Inner Temple, 1854, 5223*l.* 1*s.* 2*d.*; Middle Temple, 1854, 1*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.*; Lincoln's-inn, 1854, 3697*l.* 4*s.* 1*d.*; Gray's-inn, in 1854, the expenditure exceeded the income by the sum of 374*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.*

With respect to Lincoln's-inn, that surplus is applied in the first instance to payment of annual instalments of 1500*l.* of their debt, and will continually increase until that debt is paid off. Moreover, the falling in of the leases of Stone-buildings, which will eventually take place, will be an important addition to the revenues of that society. On the other hand, the condition of the old buildings indicates the probability and the necessity of a considerable outlay becoming necessary for repairs from time to time, which may occasionally exceed the amount above stated for last year.

Upon the whole, we are under no apprehension as to any serious falling off in the surplus incomes of Lincoln's-inn and the Inner Temple.

With respect to the Middle Temple, we have already adverted to the possibility of large outgoings being necessary for repairing the older buildings of that inn; and there is, therefore, little probability of a surplus arising in respect of the annual resources of that society.

As regards Gray's-inn, we do not think it probable that any considerable surplus income can be anticipated.

We deem it unnecessary to pursue this subject further; for if, in consequence of any falling off in the income of the inns of court, they should find themselves unable to contribute to legal education more than their present limited contributions, the requisite resources for carrying into effect the plan of education suggested in the subsequent part of our report might be obtained by a moderate additional fee on the students, which, as directly applicable to the promotion of their education, could not be objected to.

With reference to the mode in which the study of the law can be best promoted, your commissioners have directed their attention—

Firstly, to the present method of conducting legal education in this country;

Secondly, to the systems of legal education pursued in Scotland, in the principal States of Europe, and in the United States of America;

Thirdly, to the improvements which may be made in our own system.

Upon these several points we have examined witnesses, and we will briefly state the result of the evidence before submitting our own suggestions as to the course to be pursued for the future.

1. All that is at present required of a person wishing to become a student of the law in England, with the view of being ultimately called to the bar, is, that he become a member of one of the four inns of court, which is effected by making a formal application for that purpose, merely stating to the authorities of such inn who and what he is, with a certificate of his respectability, signed by two barristers, attached to it; that he keep twelve terms, by dining a certain number of times in the hall; and that he attend during one year the lectures of two of the readers appointed by the Council of Legal Education, or, at his option, submit to a public examination, which is compulsory only upon those who do not attend the lectures. The details of these arrangements we have given in a subsequent part of our report.

2. In Scotland, by the existing regulations, three qualifications are at present indispensable to the admission of "infrants," or students, into the faculty of law. It is required of every candidate that he give evidence of general scholarship; that he pass two examinations upon the civil and the Scotch laws; and, lastly, that he prepare a Latin thesis upon a title of the Pandects. This system, however, being deemed insufficient, the Faculty of Advocates at Edinburgh have lately made a report upon the subject, recommending a much more strict and comprehensive course of legal study, with examinations both in general knowledge and in law.

In France the student must first obtain the diploma of "Bachelier-ès-Lettres" at certain public schools, and then he presents himself at the Ecole de Droit, is inscribed as a pupil, and follows the courses of different professors for three years, attending lectures on the Roman law, on the Code Napoléon, on the study of law generally, on criminal legislation, on civil and criminal procedure, on criminal law and penal legislation, on administrative law, on the rights of nations, and on the history of Roman and of French law, with conferences on the Pandects. He has further to write theses on the civil law, the Roman law, criminal and commercial law; and having passed all the examinations on these several subjects, at the end of the third year he receives the diploma of "Licencié en Droit," and is entitled to be sworn before the court, and thereupon he becomes an avocat.

A fourth year's continuance, however, at the Ecole de Droit, attendance at lectures, submission to examinations, and the composition of a thesis, are requisite to obtain the degree of doctor of laws, which is necessary for those who are desirous of becoming professors in the faculties.

Throughout Germany every appointment in the law, from that of notary public to the judicial bench, is in the hands of the Government, under the patronage of the Minister of Public Justice; and the training necessary to qualify the candidates for such offices is strictly the subject of Government regulation.

That training begins at some gymnasium or state school, where the youth intended for the law are instructed in classical and general literature; and here they acquire all the knowledge of these branches of education they are ever likely to obtain.

From the gymnasium or high school the young student of law is transferred to some university by certificate of competent attainment in those preliminary studies. At the university his preparation for the profession of the law may be properly said to begin. These studies consume three years of his time, and comprise attendance upon lectures on general law, (Encyclopædia of Law), the Institutes of Justinian, the Pandects, the common law of Germany, feudal law, history of law, and criminal law.

At the close of his university career he presents himself to the judges of some one of the courts of law, bringing with him testimonials of due attendance upon lectures and good moral conduct, and applies for examination as an auscultator, or hearer of law. If upon such examination his attainments in the subjects of university study prove sufficient, he is admitted, as auscultator, to the practical study of the law under the judges of the court. In this capacity he takes notes, makes abstracts of proceedings, draws up reports, and acts in many respects as clerk or assistant to the judges.

After spending two years, or even more, in this capacity, but without official function or pay, he applies to be examined for his advancement to the higher preparatory station, namely, that of referendarius. If found competent, he enters upon a more direct participation in the business of the court, though as yet under the strict superintendence of the judges, and still without recognised function or pay. At this stage, however, he is competent to take upon him the duties of a notary or advocate; but if he aspires to the judicial dignity he has to undergo a third and last examination of a much more general and searching nature, touching upon all the subjects of previous study, and testing his power of applying them in practice. If he succeed in satisfying the examiners—no easy task—he is named assessor to some court of the first instance, yet still without pay or emolument, until the Minister of Justice shall find an opportunity of transferring him to the bench.

All these studies usually occupy seven or eight years of the student's life; and it is not till he has passed through these successive trials, and is fortunate enough to find a vacant place at the bar or on the bench, that he enters upon the profitable exercise of the profession.

In the kingdom of the Two Sicilies, any one intended for the profession of the law, after passing his examination in belles-lettres, must undergo a course of examinations before a board of the professors of law in one of the universities of the kingdom. These examinations are in the following subjects:—1. Jus nature et gentium; 2. Civil law; 3. Neapolitan civil law; 4. Neapolitan criminal law; 5. Commercial law.

The examination in canon law is optional.

The student, having passed these several examinations in a satisfactory manner, obtains a diploma called the Laurea, which enables him to practice in all the courts of the kingdom. This preparatory course takes from four to five years.

In the United States of America, where seemingly the greatest latitude exists as to admission to the bar, though generally speaking no attendance at schools, colleges, or lectures, nor any particular course of study, is absolutely required, yet an examination as to professional knowledge must be submitted to before a person is allowed to practise.

3. With reference to improvements in the study of the law in this country, your Majesty's commissioners have specially directed their attention to two questions—first, whether or not an examination should be required previous to admission as a student at an inn of court; and, secondly, whether there should be an examination before the call to the bar.

We caused questions, calculated to elicit the opinion of the Profession upon this subject, to be largely circulated. Copies of such questions were sent to all her Majesty's judges in England, of the courts both of law and equity, and to other distinguished members of the Profession; and the answers received will be found in the appendix.

We have also examined all the present readers—Mr. J. G. Phillimore, Q.C., M.P., Dr. Maine, Mr. Reginald Walpole, Mr. Herbert Broom, and Mr. William Lloyd Birkbeck; and these gentlemen, though differing as to the propriety of imposing an examination upon the candidates for admission to the inns of court, are unanimous in recommending the imposition of a compulsory examination previous to the call to the bar.

We have further examined numerous other gentlemen of eminence, both barristers and solicitors, and have found among them considerable difference of opinion upon this question. With reference to the first of these proposed examinations, several of the readers and other witnesses have expressed an opinion that every student of law ought to have received a liberal education. They therefore consider an examination of the candidate before he is admitted to be a member of an inn of court, with a view to insure his possessing that amount of classical knowledge which such an education would naturally confer, would be fit and advantageous; and this, they think, would not deter any from applying for admission, except those who have not been so educated.

Your commissioners beg further to state, that a few years since, at the Inner Temple, submission to such a preliminary examination was required, and is stated to have been found most beneficial.

Others of the readers and witnesses, however, deny the necessity, and doubt even the utility, of any examination preparatory to admission as a student; and one gentleman thinks its adoption would have the effect of discouraging men who might afterwards become learned and useful members of the bar.

One of the witnesses also, though very doubtful upon this subject, thinks it would be a serious drawback to those who propose to enter as students; and one of the readers is of opinion that such examination should at all events be dispensed with in the case of those who have obtained degrees at universities.

Your commissioners would here add, that with regard to the education of the articulated clerks—young men preparing themselves for the professions of solicitors and attorneys-at-law—the gentlemen who have been questioned on this subject are uniformly of opinion that they should be obliged to undergo an examination as to capability, fitness, and general knowledge, before being apprenticed or articulated.

As regards a compulsory examination previous to the call to the bar, your commissioners have also found considerable diversity of opinion.

The present readers, as before mentioned, are all decidedly in favour of it. They, and other gentlemen who advocate this, consider the want of it to be the chief defect of the present system; that it is the best security for industry; that the full benefit of the lectures will not be derived by any student unless he knows that he is also to undergo an examination upon the subject of them; and that it would secure, at all events, his having the necessary information before he is called.

It is suggested, however, that this examination should not be severe; and it is thought, that if properly regulated, it would not repel any great number from coming to the bar.

All the readers further agree in recommending a separate examination for honours previous to admission to the bar.

Several others of the witnesses, nevertheless, doubt the expediency of any examination for the call to the bar, conceiving that it would lead to the acquisition of only a very limited and superficial knowledge, and would be of no practical use; and that while it might discourage men of retired or reserved habits, who, though they might not prove active men in court, might make valuable chamber counsel, it would also deter country gentlemen and others, who wished to be called to the bar with a view merely to acquire such a status and so much professional knowledge as would be useful to them as magistrates, politicians, legislators, and statesmen; and this effect, in the opinion of these witnesses, would be a serious evil.

Some also of those gentlemen who approve of an examination as to legal knowledge previous to the call to the bar are adverse to that suggested for honours. It is to be observed, that an examination for honours must, ex necessitate, be voluntary, as distinguished from that required merely to entitle to a certificate.

We have carefully weighed and deliberated upon the evidence that has been thus brought before us, and before we state the conclusions at which we have arrived, will briefly state our views as to the objects to be had in view in providing for the professional education of law students of the inns of court.

Two considerations naturally offer themselves:—

First, the duty which the several societies, to whom the power of calling students to the bar has been confided, owe to the student.

Secondly, the duty which they owe to the community whilst conferring on certain selected individuals a peculiar position and attendant privileges.

1. As regards the student, he is compelled to have recourse to the society before he can practise at the bar. He is required to make payments which, though considerable in amount as regards the wealthier classes, are nevertheless onerous to others who are less favoured. He is compelled to remain a definite number of years without liberty to practise, and during those years is not permitted to carry on the business of a solicitor, or any business of a like character. He is clearly, therefore, entitled to require from the society some advantage in return for such payments, and for his submission to such restrictions, independently of his ultimate call. If we recur to the earlier history of the inns of court, it will be evident that during the period of his studentship he was assisted in his studies by readers in different branches of the law, by taking part in moots or exercises, in which practical dexterity in argument might be acquired; in addition to attendance at the chambers of a practitioner. This latter part of a student's education was provided at his own expense; the readings and exercises were provided by the inn. The student has always contributed to the library, and to that he has been allowed access, under certain regulations.

In 1833 the Inner Temple instituted two lectureships. Although the lecturers were eminent men, the attendance became so small that after two years they ceased, until 1847, when the Inner Temple established a lectureship on common law, whilst at the Middle Temple lectures were delivered upon jurisprudence and the civil law. The attendance of members was not numerous at either inn, although at the Inner Temple examinations were held, at which prizes were given by the society. These lectureships continued until the year 1851, when the present system was established. In the year 1847 the Society of Gray's-inn established, with very beneficial results, a course of lectures, followed by voluntary examinations, in which the students were classed; and the lecturer (in one department) also presided over discussions similar to the moots. In the year 1851 the present Solicitor-General caused a general meeting to be convened of the benchers of the four inns of court, with a view to provide for the better instruction of the students; and the result was, the establishment of a Council of Legal Education, consisting of eight members, two being selected by the benchers respectively of each of the four inns of court, and holding their offices for two years; and the passing of definite regulations for providing readers, who should give lectures and hold private classes for the better instruction of the students. The readers, under the direction of the Council, at stated intervals, conduct a voluntary examination of the students, the attendance at the lectures being compulsory, unless in the case of those who submit to such voluntary examination. Public examinations are held three times a year, and studentships of fifty guineas a year have been founded by the inns of court, to be held for three years by the student on each occasion passing the best examination; and certain other advantages are offered to those who distinguish themselves in such examination. We shall hereafter speak more fully of this system, which is all that is at present provided by the inns of court for the benefit of the students.

2. As regards the duty which the inns of court owe to the community whilst conferring on individuals the right of practising at the bar, it will be proper to call attention to the privileges incident to the status of a barrister. He alone is allowed to plead for others in the superior courts of Westminster, and he is not responsible to his clients for negligence or otherwise. He alone is eligible for numerous appointments of considerable emolument and responsibility in this country, including not only the higher judicial appointments, but also the offices of recorder, judge of a county court, or commissioner of bankruptcy, or revising barrister. The police magistrates of the metropolis are also selected from the bar. In the colonies the judicial appointments open to barristers only are also numerous.

The inns of court being intrusted with the exclusive right of conferring or withholding a position to which such privileges as we have enumerated are incident, the community is surely entitled to require some guarantee—first, for the personal character, and next for the professional qualifications, of the individuals called to the bar. The only security at present possessed by those who employ a barrister as counsel consists in this, that any defect in the advocate may lead to the loss of practice. But there is not even such security against the appointment of an unfit person to any of the judicial offices to which we have referred.

As regards the moral character of the barrister, considerable attention appears at all times to have been directed by the societies to the exclusion of persons, against whom any grave delinquency can be alleged, from admission to the society in the first instance, or to the bar, if it be discovered at a later stage. Further than this, the societies possess, and have on recent occasions exercised, the power of "dis-barring," or visiting with other severe penalties, after due inquiry, any person who has properly deserved reprobation; their decision in this respect being subject to an appeal to the judges. We are of opinion that these precautions have been generally sufficient to prevent any injurious effects to the community with respect to moral impropriety or misconduct in barristers.

It may be well worthy of consideration, however, whether greater powers should not be given to the inns for conducting their inquiries when proceeding to determine judicially as to the admission of students to the bar, or the dis-barring of a barrister. Great hardship may arise to the party whose conduct is in question, for want of any power to compel the attendance of witnesses and production of documents.

But as regards intellectual qualifications and the professional knowledge of a barrister, we are of opinion that there is not such security as the community is entitled to require. The Government, who appoint barristers to the various judicial posts at home and in the colonies, have no available means of testing the capacity or information of the person to be appointed, beyond general reputation, or recommendation of members of the Profession. With regard to the colonies especially, there is frequently considerable difficulty in procuring fit persons for the appointments. Men who have successfully distinguished themselves in England are often unwilling to accept appointments in a colony, and the selection as judge or Crown officer is sometimes necessarily made either from young untried men, or, what is worse, from men who have been tried and have failed. It appears to us a matter of great importance that none should be appointed to act as judges whose capacity and acquirements are likely to prove inferior to those of the counsel or attorneys who may practise before them; and it is no less important to the public interests that the Crown officers should be men of known ability, and fully competent to advise the colonial government in difficult questions.

Until the recent appointment of the Council of Legal Education there was no preliminary test whatever of the intellectual capacity or attainments of a barrister; any person (provided he were not guilty of impropriety of conduct, and complied with some special provisions) might, by simply making certain payments, and dining a certain number of terms in the hall of one of the four inns of court, become a barrister. The Inner Temple alone, for a short period, had required a preliminary classical examination before a student was admitted to the inn. This system was considered by the inn to be highly beneficial, but was discontinued after a few years, by reason of the same course not having been adopted by the other societies. At present the system pursued is as follows:—

There is no preliminary examination for the admission of students. The four inns of court have provided five readers, who receive a salary of three hundred guineas each. Each inn pays the salary of one reader, and contributes to the expenses of the fifth or remaining reader. The students pay a fee of five guineas on admission to an inn, which entitles them to attend the lectures of all the readers. These readers deliver lectures in constitutional law and legal history, civil law and jurisprudence, common law, equity, and the law of real property, and hold also evening classes for those who are willing to attend them. The students pay an additional fee, not exceeding three guineas in the whole, for being admitted to these classes.

No student can be called to the bar unless he have attended during one whole year the lectures of two readers at least, or have submitted himself to public examination; but here all effort to enforce the acquirement of information ceases. In order, however, to encourage a course of study, a voluntary examination has been instituted, which takes place three times a year; and a studentship of fifty guineas a year, to be held for three years, has been founded by the inns of court, which is conferred on the most distinguished student at each examination. Three other students may be selected by the Council of Legal Education as having passed the next best examination, and to these a certificate is given, which exempts them from keeping two terms prior to their call. Certificates of having satisfactorily passed the examination are also conferred on such other students as the Council consider entitled to receive them; and persons desirous of being relieved from attendance at lectures have the option of passing this voluntary examination as an alternative.

It will be obvious that no test whatever of the acquirements of those who are to be called to the bar has been provided by this system, except in the case of those who voluntarily submit themselves to examination, and who are probably those with regard to whom a test is least required. The attendance on lectures affords the opportunity of acquiring information, but not a test of its acquisition. Further than this, we may remark, that the voluntary examination is confined to the subjects on which the readers deliver lectures; and although no student thoroughly destitute of learning could successfully pass the examination, yet it appears by the evidence that candidates, who have been on the whole sufficiently well informed in purely professional matters to pass the examination, have yet displayed gross ignorance in a subject so nearly connected with it as the legal history of their country.

We have hitherto considered the question of the education of a barrister on general principles, and on those grounds alone have come to the conclusion that there ought to be a test both of the general and the professional knowledge of every candidate for the bar.

But we are fortified in this conclusion when we look to the course adopted by the other learned professions, as well as in the subordinate branch of the law.

The clergyman, the physician, the surgeon, the apothecary, as well as the attorney or solicitor, are all required to pass an examination before they are permitted to practise. In the navy and army a like examination of officers is required before they are entitled to their first commission, and also before a lieutenancy in the one or a captaincy in the other is attained. In every other country in Europe an educational test is applied to advocates, either by requiring a degree in law at a university, or else by a distinct professional examination. In Scotland the Faculty of Advocates have so recently as in the last year required a test both of general and professional knowledge.

In arriving at this conclusion with respect to the necessity of a test we desire to be understood as not disparaging or undervaluing the present system of practical study in a barrister's chambers, which must be admitted to be very efficient in fitting the student for the active duties of his profession; it affords, however, no facilities for the study of the scientific branches of legal knowledge, including under that term constitutional law and legal history, and civil law and jurisprudence.

Some knowledge of these subjects must be useful to the barrister, not only as an advocate, but as a judge, and especially if he should be appointed to any judicial office in India or in the colonies; and although, during the ordinary period of preparation for the bar, it would probably be found impracticable to obtain an entire acquaintance with them without sacrificing objects more immediately pressing, yet there would be time enough to lay the foundation of this knowledge, which might be completed after the student should have been called to the bar, and before his time became wholly absorbed by practice. By mastering principles, the student becomes more interested in, and obtains a steadier grasp of, practical details.

The most convenient method of acquiring knowledge of these subjects is by lectures, followed by examination applicable both to the lectures and to the subjects generally. With respect to the practical branches of the law—that is to say, common law, equity, and conveyancing—although the knowledge of them will for the most part be best acquired in the chambers of the barrister or conveyancer, yet lectures on the principles of these subjects, combined with private study, afford important assistance to the student, and the prospect of an examination in them would be an useful stimulus to pupils studying in chambers—a stimulus the more necessary when we have regard to the length of time which elapses between the commencement of study and professional practice. Moreover, the barrister or conveyancer having pupils would feel that he had an interest in their success at the examinations, and would be desirous, even more than at present, of giving systematic instruction in the law, considered as a science.

It cannot be doubted that if a pupil, before going as such to the chambers of a barrister, should study under a reader the principles of the branch of law to which he is about to address himself, he would derive far more advantage from his period of pupillage than if he went there without such previous preparation. Such instruction under a reader would not necessarily disturb the present system of pupillage in chambers, if the lectures should be given at convenient times, and if the examinations should be so regulated as to enable, not only those who attend lectures, but those who diligently attend chambers, to pass, and to obtain distinctions and prizes. With this view, the questions at examinations might be so framed as on the one hand to test the knowledge which has been derived by those students who have attended the lectures, and on the other hand to test the knowledge of the subject which has been acquired in any other manner.

THE JURIST.

* * * The long faces of a few of our friends, and their significant inquiries touching our health and expectation of life, have made us acquainted with certain reports as to the probable demise of "THE JURIST." The majority of our subscribers do not need to be assured that we look forward to a long, prosperous, and useful career. As to the authors of the report in question, if they had any sinister motive, we tell them, in the words of a great punster, that they will thereby attain neither their end nor ours.

LONDON, DECEMBER 15, 1855.

WE are fully alive to the objections that may be urged against re-opening a judicial inquiry upon the faith of extra-judicial statements. It is an evil to disturb the verdict of a jury on the ground that the facts before them, (of which they are constituted the proper judges), or the facts not before them, should neutralise such verdict; and this is especially objectionable when the evidence tendered to the Crown in an appeal to its mercy might have been, but was not, presented to the jury upon the trial; still it is an evil not to be compared with that of allowing an innocent man to suffer, or of a wholly disproportionate sentence being carried out. In the latter instance the cause of truth and justice suffers; society, which should make the case of every fellow-citizen its own in this respect, is wounded through his side; in short, an injustice is committed, which cannot, without a deep injury to the social fabric, be allowed to remain unrepaired when it is once discovered. Practical inconvenience, or such evils as we have admitted to accrue from ex post facto inquiries and doubts, are not to be weighed against this great wrong. It must further be remembered that we have no court of appeal in this country upon the merits in criminal cases; there is the one cast before the jury, and when that is decided, nothing remains but an appeal to the Crown and to public opinion. In civil causes, a second—nay, a third or fourth—trial may be obtained on the ground that the applicant was taken by surprise at the trial, or that the verdict was against the weight of evidence, or sometimes on new matter since discovered. Not so with investigations of a criminal character, and therefore it is that some allowance is to be made for efforts to obtain a calm review of such investigations, in which society, as well as its suffering member, is so deeply interested. Our remarks have especial reference to the case of Mr. Bates, the banker, who, together with Sir John Dean Paul and Mr. Strahan, was sentenced on the 27th October last to transportation for fourteen years. It will be remembered by those who were present at the trial, or who read a report of it, that the evidence bore less forcibly against Mr. Bates than against the other two prisoners. Bates, after years of toil as a clerk, had been received as a partner in the banking-house; he was not shewn to have personally dealt with the securities which had been fraudulently disposed of, but he was a partner—an active partner—with those who had done so, and, in the absence of proof to the contrary, it was reasonably presumed that he must have been cognisant of the transaction by which his firm were suddenly put in funds, which they so much needed. We believe this to have been the presumption that pressed so strongly against him, and upon which he was convicted. Thus, the learned judge, Mr. Baron Alderson, in his summing up to the jury, after stating that the case pressed more hardly against Sir John Dean Paul and Strahan than against Bates, said that they were partners, and, “as such, must naturally be supposed to know what was going on in the concern. In the first place, the money paid on account of the bonds sold was entered in Sir John Dean Paul’s book, and the aggregate of the sale (12,281*l.) was brought to the credit of the bank. This is an important point for consideration. Then it must be presumed that the partners were generally aware of the securities in their strong room, and whether any of them were abstracted. It did not follow, however, that they were necessarily aware of such abstraction. . . . In reference to the disclosure before the Court of Bankruptcy, the case was less strong as to Bates’s knowledge of the conversion of the bonds, for he gave the account as that of securities converted, not by him personally, but by the firm.”

Now, a memorial has been drawn up by Mr. Bates, and it has been, or is about to be, presented to the Queen on his behalf. It in substance states this:—In 1820 he entered the bank as a junior clerk; in 1837 he was appointed ledger clerk, with a salary of 520*l.*; and in 1841, upon the retirement of Mr. Snow, he was invited to become a partner, but upon the distinct understanding that “*his promotion was not to confer upon him any privilege beyond an increase of his income to 1000*l.* per annum, and of being announced to the world as a partner.*” He assented to this proposal, and after executing the deed of partnership, continued to remain in the public office of the bank as before, and to discharge the duties of ledger clerk, adding thereto the duty of answering, as partner, such inquiries as were made of him from time to time by the customers. Except in the ordinary routine business of the bank, he never possessed any control over the management of the business with respect to the opening of large accounts, or upon the occasion of any considerable advances of money. He never derived any pecuniary advantage from the bank beyond his salary, and lived economically with his family in apartments in Norfolk-street down to the time of the bankruptcy. The advances were made by the house to Messrs. Gandell without his concurrence being asked for, and contrary to his earnest advice. In December, 1853, on the books being balanced, he advised his co-partners to close the bank at once; but they declined to follow his advice, and said they clearly saw their way to carry on the business, and could rely on the resources they possessed and expected. He was “not in any manner cognisant of, or privy or party to, the sale of the bonds belonging to the prosecutor, Dr. Griffith, by Sir John Dean Paul, in March, 1854, and was not informed of it until some time after it had taken place; and although it may be urged against him that his remaining a member of the firm for one moment after he became acquainted with such fact was a moral weakness, yet he hopes that the subordinate and comparatively dependent position which he held, and his natural reluctance to precipitate the ruin of his partners, whilst they had the opportunity of retrieving the mischief which had been done, may not be disregarded.” Sir John assured him, when he became acquainted with the disposal of the bonds, that it was intended to replace them immediately; 5000*l.* Danish Bonds were purchased for that purpose; and when he (Bates) told the prosecutor, in April, 1855, that the dividends had been received, he believed that he was speaking the truth, and had no intention or desire to mislead. He was in Paris, where Messrs. Gandell were residing, during the greater portion of the time between May, 1854, and May, 1855, for the purpose of procuring payment of the amount due from them, and during that time took no active part in the management of the bank. He was wholly ignorant of his partners’ intention to make any deposit with Overend & Gurney, or to raise money upon the securities of their customers, or of their selling, pledging, converting, or using such securities. He refers to an affidavit made by Strahan, ready to be sworn in the Court of Bankruptcy on the 26th of last June, in which he distinctly states that Bates received a fixed salary, and had no control whatever over the affairs of the firm, and that the securities were disposed of by Sir J. D. Paul and himself, or by their authority.

Such is the present position of this most painful case so far as Mr. Bates is concerned, and we trust that if the allegations in the memorial are verified upon strict investigation, a pardon will be extended to this man, who may have had the misfortune to be associated with guilty partners without participating in their guilt.

PUBLIC EXAMINATION OF STUDENTS.

HILARY TERM, 1856.

THE Council of Legal Education have approved of the following rules for the public examination of the students.

The attention of the students is requested to the following rules of the Inns of Court:—

"As an inducement to students to propose themselves for examination, studentships shall be founded of fifty guineas per annum each, to continue for a period of three years, and one such studentship shall be conferred on the most distinguished student at each public examination; and further, the examiners shall select and certify the names of three other students who shall have passed the next best examinations, and the Inns of Court to which such students belong may, if desired, dispense with any terms, not exceeding two, that may remain to be kept by such students previously to their being called to the Bar. Provided that the examiners shall not be obliged to confer or grant any studentship or certificate unless they shall be of opinion that the examination of the students they select has been such as entitles them thereto."

"At every call to the Bar those students who have passed a public examination, and either obtained a studentship or a certificate of honour, shall take rank in seniority over all other students who shall be called on the same day."

"No student shall be eligible to be called to the Bar who shall not either have attended during one whole year the lectures of two of the Readers, or have satisfactorily passed a public examination."

RULES FOR THE PUBLIC EXAMINATION OF CANDIDATES FOR HONOURS, OR CERTIFICATES ENTITLING STUDENTS TO BE CALLED TO THE BAR.

An examination will be held in next Hilary Term, to which a student of any of the Inns of Court, who is desirous of becoming a candidate for a studentship or honours, or of obtaining a certificate of fitness for being called to the Bar, will be admissible.

Each student proposing to submit himself for examination will be required to enter his name at the treasurer's office of the Inn of Court to which he belongs on or before Tuesday, the 1st day of January next; and he will further be required to state in writing whether his object in offering himself for examination is to compete for a studentship or other honourable distinction, or whether he is merely desirous of obtaining a certificate preliminary to a call to the Bar.

The examination will commence on Tuesday, the 8th day of January next, and will be continued on the Wednesday and Thursday following.

It will take place in the Benchers' Reading-room of Lincoln's-inn; and the doors will be closed ten minutes after the time appointed for the commencement of the examination.

The examination by printed questions will be conducted in the following order:—

Tuesday morning, the 8th January, at half-past nine, on Constitutional Law and Legal History; in the afternoon, at half-past one, on Equity.

Wednesday morning, the 9th January, at half-past nine, on Common Law; in the afternoon, at half-past one, on the Law of Real Property, &c.

Thursday morning, the 10th January, at half-past nine, on Jurisprudence and the Civil Law; in the afternoon, at half-past one, a paper will be given to the students including questions bearing upon all the foregoing subjects of examination.

The oral examination will be conducted in the same order, during the same hours, and on the same subjects, as those already marked out for the examination by printed questions, except that on Thursday afternoon there will be no oral examination.

The oral examination of each student will be conducted apart from the other students; and the character of that examination will vary, according as the student is a candidate for honours or a studentship, or desires simply to obtain a certificate.

The oral examination and printed questions will be founded on the books below mentioned, regard being had, however, to the particular object with a view to which the student presents himself for examination.

In determining the question, whether a student has passed the examination in such a manner as to entitle him to be called to the Bar, the examiners will principally have regard to the general knowledge of law and jurisprudence which he has displayed.

A student may present himself at any number of examinations, until he shall have obtained a certificate.

Any student who shall obtain a certificate may present himself a second time for examination as a candidate for the studentship, but only at one of the three examinations immediately succeeding that at which he shall have obtained such certificate; provided, that if any student so presenting himself shall not succeed in obtaining the studentship, his name shall not appear in the list.

Students who have kept more than eleven terms shall not be admitted to an examination for the studentship.

INNS OF COURT COMMISSION.

REPORT.

(Concluded from p. 480).

Some of the witnesses appear to entertain apprehensions lest a compulsory test should tend to exclude from the bar that class of persons who proceed to it, not with a view to professional practice, but with the intention of becoming members of Parliament or magistrates. We should regret such a result, but we do not share in the apprehensions. It must be admitted that to this class of persons the knowledge of some portions of the science of law—especially constitutional law and legal history, jurisprudence, and international law; and of some portions of the professional branches of law, as criminal law and the law of evidence—would be highly valuable. It is not found that examinations for degrees discourage those persons, to whom a degree is of no practical utility in after life, from going to the universities, and completing their course of education there. And we conceive that the opportunities of obtaining a better education than is at present offered in scientific and practical branches of the law, which may be especially useful to the legislator or the magistrate, may not only counteract the possible fear of examination, but may induce a large number of young men of that class to prepare themselves for the bar. Those who may be unwilling to submit to any examination can have little reason to complain if they are not allowed to assume the position of members of a learned profession. And we are not prepared to say that either the former system of dining a certain number of days in hall, or the present additional requirement of sitting a certain number of hours in a lecture-room, should be accepted as sufficient qualifications for that position.

We proceed next to consider the best mode of carrying such a system of instruction as we conceive to be necessary into effect. The expediency will be conceded of having one system common to all the inns of court for testing the general knowledge of persons to be admitted as students, and the legal knowledge to be required as a condition for the call to the bar.

The combined action of the several inns of court as one body presents obvious advantages over their separate action—

First, in respect of uniformity and justice.

Secondly, in respect of expense.

It affords also a wider field of competition in the examinations than would be presented if each inn of court were to employ separate readers in the various branches of knowledge to conduct a separate series of examinations.

We think, moreover, that considerable advantage would result to the Bar as a liberal profession from a better recognised and more definite and permanent combination of the inns of court in reference to legal education and examinations than exists at present in respect of the Council of Legal Education, and that the inns might be united in a university*, still preserving their independence respectively as distinct societies, with respect to their property and internal arrangements.

Such a university might not only regulate the examinations to which we have adverted, but might likewise confer degrees in law.

Except in the Ecclesiastical and Admiralty Courts, degrees in law at our universities are at present little regarded by the Profession. We think, however, that similar distinctions given in London, and in public, by the great legal bodies, or by a combination of them, for proved merit, might be of considerable professional value. We are all aware that an industrious and accomplished barrister is, under the present system, sure of ultimate success. Early opportunities of practice are nevertheless of great value to the barrister in stimulating his industry, and in the timely development of his talents. Such opportunities might more frequently arise if the solicitor had any such grounds to justify his selection of a young barrister as might be afforded by degrees or other distinctions granted to students in respect of their examinations. Country gentlemen also, who are not desirous of practising as barristers, may nevertheless be glad to avail themselves of the opportunity of legal study afforded by such an university.

From the foregoing considerations, we deem it advisable that there shall be established a preliminary examination for admission to the inns of court of persons who have not taken a university degree, and that there shall be examinations, the passing of which shall be requisite for the call to the bar; and that the four inns of court shall be united in one university for the purpose of these examinations, and of conferring degrees; and we propose the following heads of a scheme for that purpose:—

1. That a university be constituted, with a power of conferring degrees in law, of which the constituent members shall be the chancellor, barristers-at-law, and masters of laws.

2. The chancellor of the university to be elected for life, the electors being all barristers (including serjeants) and masters of laws.

3. That a senate, consisting of thirty-two members, shall be elected in manner following, viz. eight members shall be elected by each inn of court, five of them being benchers of the inn, and elected by the benchers, and three of them being barristers (including serjeants) of any inn, but elected by the barristers (exclusive of the benchers) of the inn to which they belong.

4. That one-fourth of the senate shall retire annually, but the retiring members to be re-eligible.

5. That a vice-chancellor shall be elected by the senate from their own body, and upon his ceasing to be a member a fresh election shall take place. The vice-chancellor shall preside at the meetings of the senate, with the privilege of a casting vote. [The details, as to convening meetings, a quorum, and the like, will be provided for in any charter or act of incorporation.]

6. That the senate and vice-chancellor shall not receive any emolument, but shall have power to appoint a treasurer, a secretary or registrar, and other proper officers.

7. That the existing arrangements for the payment of the readers by the inns of court be continued, and that the senate shall from time to time direct the payment of such fees as they shall think fit by the students towards the expenses of the university, and shall transmit tables of such fees to the inns of court; and any further funds that may be requisite shall be provided by the inns of court.

8. That the meetings of the senate be in the hall of one of the inns of court.

9. That the government of the university be in the chancellor and senate.

10. That there shall be—

First, a preliminary examination of candidates for admission as students at the inns of court.

Secondly, an examination in law of students desirous of being called to the bar, or taking a degree of master in laws. That there shall be two of each of such examinations respectively held every year, the one shortly before Michaelmas Term, and the other shortly before Easter Term.

11. That no person shall be examined for admission as a student at an inn of court unless he shall produce his conditional admission by the inn, subject only to his passing such examination.

12. To pass such preliminary examination such persons must possess a competent knowledge of English history and Latin.

13. No person shall be admitted as a student into any inn of court unless he shall have passed the preliminary examination, or have obtained the degree of bachelor of arts, or inceptor or bachelor in law, at some university within the British dominions.

14. The subjects for the examination of students desirous of being called to the bar, or of taking a degree in laws, shall be divided into two branches, consisting of the following subjects:—

First branch:

- a. Constitutional Law and Legal History.
- b. Jurisprudence.
- c. The Roman Civil Law.

Second branch:

- a. Common Law.
- b. Equity.
- c. The Law of Real Property.

15. That no person shall be called to the bar unless he shall receive a certificate from the senate of having passed a satisfactory examination in at least one subject in each of the above branches.

16. That students may present themselves as candidates for honours at the examination in such branches; and if they shall be deemed by the examiners to have passed a creditable examination in all the subjects of either branch, they shall be entitled to a certificate of honour in respect of such examination; and if they shall have passed a like examination in all the subjects of both branches, they shall be entitled to the degree of master of laws. The senate to make regulations in respect of the classification of the students for honours.

17. That at each examination a studentship of fifty guineas per annum, to be held for four years, be awarded to the master in laws who shall have passed the best examination.

18. That all persons desirous of being called to the bar, and all candidates for honours other than candidates for the studentship, may, as they think fit, pass their examination in each branch either at the same time or at separate times; but the candidates for the studentship must be examined in both branches at the same time.

19. That the examiners be appointed by the senate.

20. That readers be appointed, as at present, by the inns of court, the senate appointing the fifth reader, now appointed by the Council of Legal Education, with power for each bench, (if it think fit), subject to the approbation of the senate, or for the senate on the joint application of all the benches of all the inns, to appoint additional readers.

* It may be suggested that the word "university" has been commonly applied to a course of general or universal instruction in letters and science; but the word in its earlier import simply implies a corporate body, and, notwithstanding late usage, may not inaptly be applied to a course of instruction in every department of law.

21. The inns of court not to be compelled to call to the bar those who shall have passed an examination, but to retain their present powers with reference to the calling of students to the bar, and the disbarring of persons after their call, subject to the appeal to the judges.

We have not thought it to be within the scope of our commission to consider whether it would be expedient to associate the advocates of Doctors' Commons with the great body of the Profession who are members of the inns of court; but there would, as it appears to us, be very little difficulty in rendering them constituent members of the university, if it were thought desirable.

With regard to Serjeants'-inn, it must be remembered that the judges are all members of that inn; and as they exercise an appellate jurisdiction over the inns of court in regard to the call to the bar, with which we do not propose to interfere, it does not seem to us desirable to introduce that inn as part of the university.

We would venture to suggest, in conclusion, that the several universities of the realm will, in our judgment, co-operate more effectually in advancing legal education by a sound and liberal training for the students intending afterwards to enter upon the profession of the law—a training limited, in respect to that study, to general principles—than by increasing the amount of special instruction which the inns of court give should properly supply. We feel assured that there is no more important part of the solid preparation for entering upon any of the learned professions than the discipline and the cultivation of an enlightened university education; and looking to the increased facility of such preparation, and the probable effect of the improved system in the inns of court, which we humbly recommend for their adoption, we anticipate with hope and confidence the maintenance of an educated and enlightened Bar, upon whose integrity, independence, and learning the pure administration of justice, and the security of civil society, must, under the blessing of Divine Providence, largely and permanently depend.

PUBLIC PROSECUTORS.

In May last the Public Prosecutors Bill was referred to a select committee of the House of Commons, consisting of the following members:—Sir George Grey, Lord Stanley, the Attorney-General, Sir Frederick Theisiger, the Solicitor-General for Ireland, the Lord Advocate, Mr. Watson, Mr. J. G. Phillimore, Mr. Walpole, Mr. Napier, Mr. Miles, Mr. Ewart, and Mr. Phillips.

In August last the committee reported to the House that they thought it most expedient for them, at that advanced period of the session, merely to present the evidence they had collected, and they recommended that they should be permitted to resume their labours at the commencement of next session.

The evidence has now made its appearance in the form of a "blue book," and we propose to transfer the most interesting portions of it to our pages.

Lord Brougham's Evidence.

Lord Brougham was the first witness examined. He said—The first great evil which I think exists at present is the ineffectual provision made for the prosecution of offences. Nothing can be more ineffectual than the provision which the law, and the practice under it, now make for it. An individual is injured by either his person being attacked or by his property being invaded, and he is called upon himself to prosecute, and he is in some cases compelled to prosecute; though, generally speaking, I believe one may say, that what is called "binding over to prosecute" rather means binding over to give evidence than to do anything more; it possibly comes to that practically. There is no doubt that a magistrate has the power where he pleases, in the alternative, to bind over to prosecute, or to bind over to give evidence; and sometimes, though I believe rarely, he binds over to prosecute. . . . There is some hardship even in that, in being bound over to give evidence; for though a person's expenses are paid, yet they are paid after the trial, and upon the Court being of opinion that there was a ground for the prosecution, where he was not bound over. Where he is bound over, it would be very hard indeed to refuse to give him his expenses. But then, I believe, there is this difference—at least, the statutes take that distinction—that he may have his fair and reasonable expenses; but unless he is a poor person, he has, as I apprehend, no consideration given to him for his trouble and loss of time; if he is a poor person he has, but that is of modern date. I take it that that is really only since the 18 Geo. 3.

Mr. Phillimore.—Does your Lordship think that we might add to the list of the evils the danger of a poor prosecutor being induced to compromise, and to waive the injury done to the public altogether?—It is possible, no doubt, that this might happen; but under that head, of the escape of the offender, there is a much wider door open than that to which you refer; for it is a thing which constantly happens, that a wealthy person under prosecution buys off the witness. If the witness is under recognisances to prosecute, or to appear and give evidence, the forfeiture of the recognisances is by a wealthy party very easily settled for, and there is no prosecution.

The Attorney-General.—The difficulty which I feel is this—I do not quite see how the appointment of a public prosecutor would prevent that result. If the prosecution were altogether vested in a private individual, you might buy off the private individual. Put the case where there is a public prosecutor: the public prosecutor would seek to procure the attendance of the witnesses, so as to accomplish in the end a conviction. So far as I see, it would still be as easy to buy off the witnesses as it is now to buy off the prosecutor; and I have never seen quite clearly how the appointment of a public prosecutor would prevent that mischief which arises of getting rid of the testimony?—I do not see that any provision which you could make would absolutely prevent, in all cases, that very great mischief to which we are adverting; but there is a great difference between the case of a single witness bound over to prosecute and give evidence, and he alone, therefore, being certain to appear, and all the witnesses who may be competent to prove the case, and whom the public prosecutor could cast his net over and bring.

All the witnesses are bound over now?—All those who are before the magistrate, no doubt.

Mr. Phillimore.—Your Lordship thinks that it would diminish, but that it would not prevent?—No doubt it would very greatly diminish, without wholly and absolutely preventing.

Would not your Lordship think that a person in the rank of a public prosecutor, instead of a policeman, would have a very considerable moral effect?—I should think so. I gave one or two instances as to the moral operation when I was examined here before, and also lately in my statement in the House of Lords. One very remarkable instance was a case which happened at Plymouth. I think the person engaged was an anchor smith in a large way of business—a very wealthy man. Under the pressure of temporary embarrassment he had committed forgery to a large amount. He was arrested, imprisoned, and the person was bound over to prosecute in the usual way. There was no appearance at the trial. The recognisances were of course forfeited. The man had been bought off, and there was no prosecution of that offender at all. That would have been a very difficult thing in Scotland, or where there is a public prosecutor; for the person who forfeits his recognisance is perfectly known, and unless not only the recognisance had been satisfied by the person under accusation, but the party who had been forged upon had been got out of the country, the prosecution must have gone on: there could have been no mode of preventing the prosecution by merely providing for the recognisance being forfeited, because the party would have been in some degree under the jurisdiction of the Court, and liable to be called upon. The public prosecutor would not have cared a rush for the recognisance being forfeited; he would not have cared a rush even for the recognisance; in all probability there would have been no recognisance in the case of there being a public prosecutor; he would have subpoenaed the witness, and that witness must have appeared; and the only way of getting rid of that witness would have been by removing him from the country which one has known in certain cases; but then they were not the cases of persons of a certain rank or station, but very inferior persons, who were by the parties under accusation spirited away, or induced to go abroad by the payment of a large sum—nay, by the payment of an annuity for life to those individuals.

The Attorney-General.—No doubt that does occur in certain cases?—One has known cases of that sort.

I quite agree that the appointment of a public prosecutor would tend, in many points of view, to improve the administration of justice, but I do not quite see how getting witnesses out of the way could be altogether prevented?—No doubt we must go by steps. Let me just put another case, which refers to parties who are incapable of being bought off in any way. There are members of the Society of Friends, Quakers, who are exceedingly hostile to the penal law as it now stands, and would have been much more hostile to it at the time I mention, when forgery was a capital offence. They are bound over to prosecute, and they forfeit their recognisance, without the party paying a farthing for it; even if there was no recognisance they would have a great reluctance to come forward; but they would be compelled to come forward. I know one case in which one of the great bill-brokers in this city had a forged bill in his possession; he refused to come forward; there was nobody except another party who had an interest in prosecuting that individual; if there had been a public prosecutor it would have made a case past all doubt. . . . I think a very misplaced humanity, and very often a personal delicacy towards parties, has the effect of preventing a prosecution; whereas a public prosecutor would be bound to have no such feelings, and would have none. . . . I wish to be guarded, in all the evidence which I am giving upon this subject, against its being supposed that I consider it at all an easy matter. I consider that it is surrounded with very great difficulties—I only hope not insuperable difficulties; but I have always felt the difficulty very strongly indeed. Lord Campbell, when the case was broached once or twice, I think, in the course of this session and the last in the House of Lords, also felt the great want of a public prosecutor, but was staggered by the difficulties in supplying a remedy; and I cannot help feeling that there are very great difficulties. But perhaps I might mention, which I did upon that occasion, that an arrangement had been made in 1834, just before the Government was changed, for taking a step in that direction without at all introducing a legislative measure, which should give not only a public prosecutor, but what I am afraid must be a part of it, namely, a system of public prosecutors, because that is one great difficulty, that you must have not only one public prosecutor generally to superintend, but you must have locally his deputies, or in some sort his representatives. That was certainly one very great difficulty in the case. Our plan then was this:—I was Chancellor, and Lord Duncannon, afterwards Lord Beborough, was Secretary for the Home Department; we had arranged everything at that time, namely, about October and November, 1834, for making the experiment in this way: to take the Central Criminal Court, which has a very large jurisdiction, now extending over more than 2,000,000; and at that time it had not quite so great, but certainly a very large jurisdiction; and we proposed that in the Central Criminal Court the Treasury should employ one or more counsel, and always the same, and should give them the preparation and superintendence of prosecutions. This plan was formed upon the precedent which we had set us by the practice in some counties in England, chiefly the West Riding of Yorkshire and the counties of Durham and Northumberland. When this was mentioned in the House of Lords lately, the present Chancellor added the county of Chester also; he stated that there was an arrangement of the same sort there. The clerk of the peace singles out one counsel, and gives him the general superintendence of prosecutions—the preparation of the indictment, the examination of the evidence previously, settling whether it is a case fit to be prosecuted or not, and then superintending it, and, generally speaking, being the counsel at the trial; not always, and not of necessity, but generally being one of the counsel. That has been found exceedingly advantageous; and there is a great difference as respects the mode of conducting the trials and the results; the proportions of acquittals to convictions in those counties are exceedingly different, I believe, from what they are generally speaking. I think I may include the West Riding of Yorkshire; but I am more clear about Durham and Northumberland. Mr. Loeb used to be the person always employed. I ought to mention, in continuance of my answer to your first question as to the advantages of a public prosecutor, that not only does the want of a public prosecutor enable the guilty to escape, but it in many cases puts persons who are not guilty upon their trial when they ought not to be so put. I consider that the responsible character of an individual public prosecutor is the best possible security against that; and that this happens, and happens very frequently, I can have no manner of doubt. There is the check of the grand jury, to be sure; but that check has been found in many cases exceedingly insufficient, from there being no individual responsibility in the grand jury, from no one knowing who finds the bill. Here are twenty-three persons; one cannot tell which of those twenty-three constitute the twelve who have found the bill. The case which I am stating has occurred. I shall not easily forget a case which I mentioned in my evidence many years ago in this House, and which I stated lately in the House of Lords—a case which happened at Lancaster. Mr. Blundell, of Ince, was put upon his trial for murder, and held up his hand in the dock charged with murder. The murder which the grand jury in this instance conceived to have been committed by him was this: there was a road in repair upon his estate, and his bailiff had omitted, in throwing a rope across the road in order to prevent access, to put a lantern, and an old woman, coming from market at night in a donkey cart, tripped over this rope for want of a light, and broke her neck, and unfortunately was killed. The grand jury were pleased to consider, in the first place, that this was murder; and in the next place, that it was murder by Mr. Blundell, perpetrated by the negligence of his bailiff. The case was opened before Wood, B.; the counsel had some difficulty in keeping his countenance long enough to open the case; however, he did get through a statement of the facts pretty nearly as I have mentioned them. Wood, B., immediately said, "Are the grand jury discharged? Go and see." The grand jury were discharged, and could not be found. "I am very sorry for it," he said; "this is a most shameful case." Mr. Blundell, of course, was immediately acquitted, but he went down to the grave with the stigma of having held up his hand on a charge of murder, in the dock among felons at Lancaster assizes. He was a Roman Catholic, and there were very great religious prejudices and controversies prevailing in that county; and I have no doubt that that was not the last time that he heard of this charge having been made against him. Now, I say no public prosecutor durst have put Mr. Blundell upon his trial.

Mr. Phillips.—Had a magistrate committed in that case?—It is possible Mr. Blundell may have been committed; he was not in gaol at the time; if he had been committed, he was out upon bail.

The Attorney-General.—Would your Lordship deem it desirable, with the view of preventing such a case of public outrage as that, that the public prosecutor should intervene prior to the finding of the bill by the grand jury, or after it?—I should greatly prefer the public prosecutor interfering in the first instance.

So that only such cases should be sent to the grand jury as the public prosecutor was of opinion ought to be submitted to them?—Yes; I have the greatest reverence for the institution of the grand jury, but at the same time I consider that in the great majority of cases it might be most conveniently and advantageously dispensed with.

The Lord Advocate.—If there was a public prosecutor, would it not be better to do away with the grand jury altogether?—I can hardly say that.

Mr. Phillips.—Would your Lordship be disposed to take this view of the case: supposing the public prosecutor refuses his sanction to a prosecution, would you allow the complaining party, at his own risk and expense, to take it before the grand jury; because otherwise does not it appear to your Lordship that you give to the public prosecutor, supposing him appointed, absolute power?—I would by no means take away the power of the individual or the grand jury.

Lord Stanley.—But in such event, would not the person whose case the public prosecutor had refused to send before the grand jury have undergone what would probably be regarded by the grand jury as a virtual acquittal beforehand?—No doubt it would have that effect; the refusal of the public prosecutor would always be taken into account. In Scotland the course is this: the Lord Advocate, who is the public prosecutor there, may refuse to prosecute; but the private party, with what is called the concurrence of the Lord Advocate, may prosecute; and it was always in my time a moot point whether the Lord Advocate had the right to refuse his concurrence; I think the more general opinion was, that he had not the right to refuse his concurrence.

The Lord Advocate.—I think it is now fixed that he has not the right?—I have seen a prosecution (it was a case of military riot) in which several persons were tried, the prosecution being carried on, with the concurrence of the Lord Advocate, by a private prosecutor; they were acquitted, no doubt, but they might have been convicted. And I ought to observe, that in discussing the question of a public prosecutor with several of the judges particularly, their great objection to dispensing with the grand jury, and to having a public prosecutor, which might virtually dispense with the grand jury, was the taking away from private parties their right of prosecuting, and vesting it in the Crown. I also know that many persons other than judges had a great objection to the alteration of the law with respect to appeal of felony and appeal of murder. I remember Sir Francis Burdett very much objected to it, preferring even the possibility of the plea of wager of battle to abolishing it altogether, because it would be taking away the remedy of the public. But I do not see at all why that remedy should be taken away. I do not see the incompatibility of the two; they are not found incompatible in Scotland, though it very rarely happens that a private party prosecutes in Scotland.

Lord Stanley.—Even leaving the right of private prosecution, and retaining the grand jury on its present footing, would not the decision of a public prosecutor, whom you assume to be an experienced lawyer, refusing to take up the case after hearing the statement of the aggrieved party, virtually supersede the functions of the grand jury, and throw out of court the case which he had refused to take up?—It might sometimes do that; but then there would be this security, that supposing the public prosecutor is the servant of the Crown, the other side of the question is to be considered, of a prosecution being instituted which ought not to be instituted; the grand jury in that case is a protection to the party. For instance, supposing in the heat of political discussion, or political controversy, violent times were to recur—which God forbid! but which some of us are old enough unhappily to remember—there might be prosecutions where a grand jury would be a salutary check. However, this is to be said, and it may be considered no doubt as for a public prosecutor and against a grand jury, that in times of that sort the grand jury always have a very great chance of being under the influence of the popular excitement at the moment.

The Attorney-General.—Has it occurred to your Lordship to consider the question with reference to a distinction between political and other cases, whether, supposing it were thought expedient to dispense with the intervention of the grand juries in ordinary cases, they might be reserved for cases of a particular description?—It would be very difficult to draw the line, by any legislative enactment, between political and other cases. For example, in the very case to which I have referred, where in Scotland, the Lord Advocate having refused to prosecute, a relation prosecuted the parties with his concurrence, it was for murder, and the question would have arisen, was it a political case or not? It was a murder connected with a riot, no doubt; but it might not have been so connected in such a way as to come within the scope of a provision of that sort.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The terms are in general the same as those of the principal Fire Insurance Offices. The advantages consist in the extent of the capital responsible for losses, namely, 750,000*l.* in the business being confined to the best classes of Insurance; in the RETURN OF THE DISCOUNT ALLOWED BY THE GOVERNMENT ON THE DUTY; and in the liberality and promptitude with which the business is conducted.

Ordinary Classes of Insurance.

FIRST CLASS.

Premium—1*s.* 6*d.* per cent. per annum, (with certain exceptions).

SECOND CLASS.

Premium—2*s.* 6*d.* per cent. per annum, (with certain exceptions).

No charge will be made for policies when the premium amounts to six shillings and upwards, nor when transferred from other offices.

THE DISCOUNT ON THE DUTY ALLOWED BY THE GOVERNMENT IS IN ALL CASES RETURNED TO THE INSURED, the effect of which is to give them a return or bonus, equal to 10*l.* per cent. annually, on the premiums payable upon FIRST-CLASS risks.

Special risks are not taken by this Company.

LIFE DEPARTMENT.

THE LAW UNION INSURANCE COMPANY is based upon a principle which combines the benefits of Mutual Insurance with the guarantee of a Subscribed Capital of 250,000*l.* sterling, in the Life Insurance Department. Whilst perfect security is thus afforded, the number and character of the shareholders (almost all of whom are members of the Legal Profession) will command a large amount of business, and consequent advantages will arise to the Insured.

The Tables of Premiums have been calculated on the latest Report of the Registrar-General, and are as economical as is consistent with safety.

Premiums may be paid annually, half-yearly, or quarterly, in one payment, or in a limited number of payments.

No entrance fees nor appearance before the Board required.

Whole world Policies granted.

Profits divided every five years; and any Bonus declared may be either received in cash, added to the sum insured, or applied to the reduction of the Premiums.

The age of the Insured will, at any time, on satisfactory proof, be admitted on a Policy.

Policies indisputable, except in cases of fraud.

Assignments and transfers of Policies will be registered and acknowledged.

Claims payable in three months after proof of death.

The legal business in connexion with Mortgages may, under judicious regulations, be transacted by Solicitors of known respectability, being shareholders in the Company.

A liberal Commission allowed to Solicitors and Estate Agents.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, DECEMBER 22, 1855.

THE direction of Lord Campbell to the jury in the recent case of Carlen and Another v. Ireland, tried at Guildhall on the 13th inst., is alleged by some of our daily contemporaries* to be at variance with the judgment of the Court of Exchequer, delivered by Parke, B., in Bellamy v. Majoribanks, (7 Exch. 389), and to have created considerable surprise and dissatisfaction in the minds of the mercantile community.

The plaintiffs had given to one of their clerks a cheque for 48l. 17s. 11d., drawn on Messrs. Masterman, and crossed with the name of Messrs. Dixon & Co., to pay into their bank. The clerk was in the habit of dining at a table d'hôte held at a tavern kept by the defendant in Fetter-lane, and to which persons were admitted only by an introduction, which he had obtained, through a respectable person, and he had represented to the defendant that he was an attorney, in business for himself. Instead of paying the cheque into the bank, he took it to the defendant, and requested him to cash it for him, as it was crossed, and he had no banker through whom he could present it for payment. The defendant said he would pay the cheque in to his bankers, (Messrs. Gosling), and as soon as it was cashed he would give the clerk the money; and he afterwards paid him the amount, without any knowledge of the circumstances under which the cheque had been obtained. The clerk paid 15*l.* 4*s.* 1*d.* into Messrs. Dixon's on account of this cheque, and then absconded with the balance. The declaration in the action alleged that the cheque was the property of the plaintiffs, and had been converted by the defendant to his own use. The defendant pleaded that the cheque was not the property of the plaintiffs. For the plaintiffs Bellamy v. Majoribanks was cited, and it was contended, that upon the authority of the judgment delivered by Parke, B., in that case, the question for the jury would be, whether the defendant had exercised reasonable caution in cashing the cheque. But Lord Campbell, in summing up, directed the jury that the question for them was, not merely whether there had been a want of caution on the part of the defendant, for that would not be sufficient to disentitle him to the benefit of the cheque, but whether the defendant gave value for it, and took it bona fide, and without any knowledge that it had been fraudulently obtained by the clerk, or that he had no right to transfer it to him. The jury found for the defendant. It will be observed that the action was not against the banker, (the drawee of the cheque), but by a former owner of the cheque against a transferee by delivery. It is one of the essential ingredients of a cheque that it should be payable to bearer on demand; (55 Geo. 3, c. 184, sched., part 1); it passes, therefore, by delivery, like bills, notes, &c. payable to bearer; and to restrict the negotiability of the cheque in this respect would be to render the instrument no longer a cheque. (See Bellamy v. Majoribanks, 7 Exch. 401). And although formerly it was considered that the title of the transferee of a cheque, bill, or note payable to bearer would be affected by want of caution on his part, and that he would be liable in trover to the real owner if he were guilty of negligence in taking it, (Snow v. Peacock, 2 Car. & P. 221; Gill v. Cubitt, 3 B. & Cr. 466), yet it having been found essential to the free circulation of instruments payable to bearer, which circulate as money, and to the interests of trade and commerce, that the honest possession thereof, and the property therein, should be inseparable, it is now finally settled, that if a man takes honestly an instrument payable to bearer, he has a good title to it, and it is immaterial with what degree of negligence he may have acted, unless his negligence be so gross as to induce the jury to believe that he was guilty of fraud. (Goodman v. Harvey, 4 Ad. & El. 870; Willis v. The Bank of England, Id. 32; Foster v. Pearson, 1 C., M., & R. 855; Collins v. Martin, 1 B. & P. 681; Elther v. Rich, 10 Ad. & El. 784). Such being the well-established law as regards cheques generally, it becomes necessary to consider what is the effect of the cheque being crossed; and with respect to this there appears to be a marked distinction between the position of the banker by whom the cheque is to be paid, and that of the transferee of the cheque. The law is clearly laid down in Bellamy v. Majoribanks, in which most of the principal London and many country bankers had been examined as to the custom with respect to crossed cheques, and the Court decided according to what they considered to be the great preponderance of the evidence given by the witnesses, that the crossing of a cheque with the name of a banker, whether by the drawer or by any subsequent holder, does not in any way restrict the negotiability of the cheque, or render it necessary that it should be presented for payment by or through such banker, but is simply a memorandum giving notice to the banker on whom it is drawn that the party seeking payment thereof ought to present it through some banker; and that if the banker, (the drawee), notwithstanding this notice, pay the cheque otherwise than through a banker, and without making full inquiry into the title of the party presenting it, he does so at his peril, and it will be strong evidence of negligence in an action against him. In delivering the judgment, Parke, B., said, "We think that the great preponderance of the evidence on both sides tends to shew the custom to be that which is reported to have been stated by some of the jury in the case of Stewart v. Lee, (1 Moo. & M. 161), viz. 'that where a cheque is crossed, bankers generally refuse to pay it to any one except a banker; and if they do pay it to a person not a banker, they consider that they do it at their peril, in the event of the party to whom the payment is made not being entitled to receive it. That the object is to secure the payment, not to any particular banker, but to a banker, in order that it may be easily traced for whose use the money was received; and that it was not intended thereby at all to restrict the circulation or negotiability of the cheque, but merely to compel the holder to present it through a quarter of known respectability and credit.' We are strongly inclined to think, that, on a full inquiry, the usage will turn out to be no more than this; and considering the custom in this point of view, the crossing is a mere memorandum on the face of the cheque, and forms no part of the instrument itself, and in no way alters its effect. There can be no doubt that such an usage is highly beneficial to the public. These instruments are, in their essential character, payable to bearer; they are, in many respects, treated as bank notes, for which of late years they have been largely substituted; but like all other things, they are liable to be mislaid, or lost, or stolen, and may get into the hands of persons, who are not entitled to receive payment of them. It is manifestly, therefore, a great protection and safeguard to the real owner that there should exist the means of tracing and ascertaining for whose use the money paid on a cheque is received, and to whom the money actually goes; and the payment through a banker secures this object. . . . We think the crossing of a cheque is a protection and safeguard to the owner of the cheque; and that in the event of a banker paying a crossed cheque otherwise than through a banker, the circumstance of his so paying it would be strong evidence of negligence in an action against him. . . . We think there is no legal objection to the custom, if thus limited and understood, upon the ground of its being repugnant to the essential quality of a cheque, namely, its negotiability by delivery. There is no obligation upon any one to receive payment by a cheque, whether it be crossed or not crossed; but if a man receive a crossed cheque, he seems to us, not indeed to incur the obligation of presenting it for payment through a banker as a condition precedent, but he ought not to complain if the drawee does not pay without previous inquiry." Independdently, therefore, of the objection, that if a special crossing had the effect of rendering it no longer payable to bearer, but only to the banker named, it would destroy one of the essential ingredients of a banker's cheque, the above observations of the Court of Exchequer shew that the weight of the evidence given by the bankers examined on both sides was, that there is no material distinction between crossing a cheque with the name of a banker, and simply crossing it with the words "and Co.," the effect in either case being merely to give notice that the cheque should be presented through some banker. And this view of the custom is supported by the practice adopted by the bankers in Bellamy v. Majoribanks and in Carlton v. Ireland: in the former case, Messrs. Gosling presented and Messrs. Coutts paid Mr. Bellamy's cheque, though it had been previously crossed with the name of another bank; and in the latter, Messrs. Gosling presented and Messrs. Masterman paid the cheque, though it had been previously crossed with the name of Messrs. Dixon. The custom, so limited and understood, is founded on the practice of bankers, and applies only to the banker by whom the cheque is to be paid; it is notice to him not to pay except through a banker; but it does not affect a mere transferee of the cheque, like the defendant in Carlton v. Ireland. To hold that the crossing will affect a bonâ fide transferee of the cheque, and as against him raise a presumption of negligence in taking it, which will impugn his title thereto, would be, in fact, to restrict the negotiability and prevent the transfer of a crossed cheque; and the object of the custom, viz. to afford the means of tracing and ascertaining on whose account the cheque was presented, and by whom the money was received, appears to be sufficiently attained by merely requiring that the banker on whom it is drawn should not pay it except through a banker. Bankers, from the very nature of their business, are called upon, and their contract with their customers in fact obliges them, in the case of ordinary cheques, to pay them (in the absence of any circumstances of peculiar suspicion) to any person presenting them at the bank, and consequently to perfect strangers, with whose residence, business, or habits they are wholly unacquainted; and there would be therefore great difficulty, often amounting to an impossibility, where a cheque has fallen into dishonest hands, in tracing the party who received payment of it. The custom of crossing cheques enables the owner of the cheque to obviate this difficulty, and, by requiring the drawee of the cheque to pay it only through a banker, affords the means of ascertaining on whose account the payment was received, and, through that party, the person from whom he received it. Although bankers, from the nature of their business, are compelled to pay cheques to strangers, an ordinary person would not cash a cheque crossed or uncrossed for a perfect stranger; and if he did so, it would be in itself strong evidence that the transferee was not a bonâ fide holder. The effect of crossing a cheque, therefore, as the law now stands, is not to give to the owner absolute protection against a dishonest holder, but it gives almost the certainty of tracing and detecting him. On the other hand, to restrict the negotiability of crossed cheques, by holding that the taking of such a cheque amounts to negligence in the transferee, which will or may deprive him of his title to the cheque, would be a serious inconvenience to a large body of the public, who now both give and receive crossed cheques, and enjoy all the security which the present custom of bankers affords. Many persons who have no banker now receive crossed cheques, and pay them to their tradesmen, or get them cashed by a friend; but who will take a crossed cheque if the fact of his so taking it is to taint his title to its proceeds? The decision in Carlton v. Ireland, therefore, appears to be in accordance with the law, and with the previous decision in Bellamy v. Majoribanks. If merchants and others in the habit of making large payments by means of crossed cheques wish for a greater security than they now possess, the most effectual and convenient course will be, to obtain from the Legislature an enactment, distinguishing between a simple crossing "and Co.," which should continue to afford the security which the present custom gives, without restricting the negotiability of the cheque, and a special crossing with the name of a particular banker, which might have given to it the effect of rendering the cheque payable to such banker only, without affecting its validity as a cheque, within the proviso in the schedule, part 1, of the 55 Geo. 3, c. 184.

* Vide the Times, "City Articles," Dec. 14 and 19, 1855.

LIABILITY OF EXECUTORS UNDER AN AGREEMENT TO TAKE A LEASE.

In the case of Stephens v. Hotham (1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 842) the testator had entered into an agreement for a building lease of copyhold land, and as the custom did not allow of leases beyond twenty-one years, a lease was taken for twenty-one years, with an agreement that the lessor should at the expiration of the term procure a license for a further lease to the builder, his executors, administrators, and assigns, and that the builder, his executors, administrators, and assigns, should accept such lease, and execute a counterpart of it. The builder entered into possession under the first lease, and died before the term expired, appointing the defendants his executors. The lessor procured a license to demise, and tendered a counterpart of the new lease to the defendants for them to execute, which they declined to do. On a bill for specific performance, Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., on the authority of Phillips v. Everard, (5 Sim. 102), but against the inclination of his own opinion, decreed specific performance and execution of the counterpart by the executors, observing that great care would be required in framing the lease so as to avoid fixing the defendants with a personal liability to pay the rents, &c., especially on the reddendum.

In Phillips v. Everard the plaintiff agreed with the defendant's testator to grant to the latter, on the expiration of an existing lease, a new lease, subject to the same covenants as were contained in the existing lease. Among those covenants was a covenant against assignment of the lease, not extending to the lessee's executors or administrators. The testator died before the time arrived for granting the new lease, and Sir L. Shadwell, V. C., decreed specific performance of the agreement, the form of the lease to be settled by the Master. Before the bill was filed the plaintiff offered to permit the covenants which were to be entered into by the executors to be so qualified as that they might be no further liable thereon than they would have been on the covenants which ought to have been entered into by their testator in case a proper lease had been made to him in his lifetime.

On the other hand, in Worley v. Frampton, (5 Hare, 560), which was cited in Stephens v. Hotham, and was the converse case of a bill filed by a lessee, against a devises in trust of the reversion, for specific performance of a covenant to grant a renewed lease, with a covenant for further renewal, Sir J. Wigram, V. C., held that the trustees could not be required to enter into any covenant for renewal, even though qualified so as to render him and his representatives liable only to the extent of their beneficial interest, if any. It was admitted that the agreement gave a good equitable title to the renewal, without any further covenant. The same point had been decided by Sir J. Leach, V. C., in the case of The Copper Mining Company v. Beach, (13 Beav. 478; S. C., 1 L. J., O. S., 84).

The cases are in conflict. No doubt seems to have been entertained in any of them as to the possibility of qualifying the executor's covenants so as to prevent his incurring a greater liability than his testator's covenants would have imposed on him. In Phillips v. Everard, as we are informed by the reporter, the parties agreed upon the form of the lease, and did not go before the Master. The object, which was to frame covenants that should be binding on the executors to the extent of the assets, and on the person for the time being entitled to the term, without binding the executors after parting with the term beyond the amount of the assets, seems to be attainable in the same way in which covenants for title by persons having and conveying partial interests in land are qualified, namely, by an express limitation of the covenantor's liability to the extent desired. Thus, if a tenant for life of one moiety of a piece of land joins in a conveyance of the fee, he covenants for and against the acts and defaults of himself and of those claiming under him, so far only as concerns the title, &c. to one moiety, during his own life. In the same manner it is conceived that an executor may covenant for payment of rent, &c., but so as not to render him, his heirs, executors, or administrators, personally liable in respect of any arrears of rent or breaches of covenant accrued or committed after he or they shall have assigned the term, beyond the value of the personal estate of the testator which shall have come to the hands or within the power of the executor, his executors or administrators, and for the time being shall not have been duly applied in or towards the discharge of any debts or obligations of the testator, over which, in the administration of such assets, the claims of the testator's covenantees would not be entitled to priority. If by executing a counterpart of a lease containing covenants so qualified an executor can discharge his testator's contract, and place the lessee and himself in a position substantially the same as that in which they would have stood if the counterpart had been executed by the testator, there seems to be no reason why he should not be compelled to do so.

Reviews.

Blackstone's Commentaries, systematically abridged, and adapted to the existing State of the Law and Constitution; with great Additions. By SAMUEL WARREN, of the Inner Temple, Esq., D.C.L., F.R.S., Recorder of Hull, and one of her Majesty's Counsel. Post 8vo., pp. 888. [Mazewell, and Blackwoods.]

This work is at once a second edition of the Selections from Blackstone, by Mr. Warren and the late J. W. Smith, published in 1836, and a composition for Mr. Warren's long-promised edition of the entire Commentaries, now declared to be abandoned. Blackstone's work was never perfectly adapted to either of the purposes for which it was designed. As an institutional book for professional students, it was defective in many important branches of the law—for instance, contracts, and indeed mercantile law generally, and the doctrines of equity; while, on the other hand, the divisions appropriated to the law of real property, and to civil procedure, were so incumbered with technical details as to be unreadable by those who merely sought for so much knowledge of English law as becomes an educated member of society. Mr. Warren, who has had the general reader in view during the preparation of the present work, has pruned away the conveyancing technicalities with perhaps almost too free a hand; but he has substituted information on a variety of subjects of more general interest, and has corrected Blackstone's historical and antiquarian chapters by the light which modern research has afforded. Two-thirds of the book, he informs us, consist of new matter. The whole is evidently the result of much honest labour, and will be very useful for educational purposes, and acceptable to non-professional readers in general.

A Treatise on the Administration of Trust Funds under the Trustee Relief Act; with an Appendix, containing the Trustee Relief Act, the Act for the further Relief of Trustees, the General Orders, and Forms of Proceedings. By JOHN DARLING, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 8vo., pp. 140.

[Stevens & Norton.]

A CAREFULLY prepared work on a subject of everyday practice. Mr. Darling appears to have collected all the authorities, (already amounting to about two hundred in number), and in stating them and the enactments, is always alive to the importance of extracting a principle. The heads of contents are:—Introduction: Nature and objects of the Trustee Relief Act.—Chap. I. The payment of trust funds into court. Sect. 1. To what description of trustees and trust funds the act is applicable. Sect. 2. Under what circumstances the trustees are authorised to pay trust funds into court. Sect. 3. How trustees must proceed in paying trust funds into court, and how far trustees are discharged by the payment of trust funds into court.—Chap. II. Payment of trust funds out of court. Sect. 1. Application for payment of trust funds out of court in ordinary cases. Sect. 2. Special circumstances incident to applications for payment of trust funds out of court in cases where pauper infant lunatics or married women are interested. Sect. 3. The practice respecting stop orders and charging orders.—Chap. III. Costs of proceedings under the act. Sect. 1. Costs of paying a trust fund into court. Sect. 2. Costs of applications for payment out of court of the capital of a trust fund. Sect. 3. Costs of applications for payment of the dividends of a trust fund.—Appendix: I. The act. II. The general orders. III. Forms of proceedings.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—The excellence, in almost all respects, of the scheme for the incorporation of the Inns of Court as a legal university, will, I doubt not, be very generally recognised by the Profession as well as by the public. I think, however, that it will be apparent, on careful consideration, that some minor details of the plan are less simple than they might be, and that some of the terminology employed in the report is not only inaccurate, but calculated to produce confusion.

Analogy would suggest, as the style of the intended corporation, "The Chancellor, Barristers, and Students of the University of Law," or "of the Legal University of London." The term "barristers" would, I apprehend, properly include all who have been called to the bar, and not subsequently deprived of the degree then conferred upon them.

The designation "Master of Laws" (though used of late at Cambridge) is objectionable, inasmuch as it tends to the confusion of our ancient academic system. It seems to be very generally forgotten, that in accordance with that system there are two, and only two, degrees in each faculty—bachelors, and masters or doctors*. The terms "master" and "doctor" denote the same thing; there is no difference whatever between them, unless it be that in the preliminary faculty, that of arts, the appellation used is, in ordinary acceptance, less dignified than that employed in the higher faculties. To have doctors and masters in the same faculty is an anomaly similar to that of having ears and counts in the same peerage, or, as somebody has observed with reference to the statute lately passed at Cambridge, to a Maria and a Mary in the same family.

It may be seriously doubted whether the introduction of degrees into our proposed legal university, other than the two ancient degrees in common law—barrister and serjeant, which are analogous to bachelor and doctor—would not be in itself a great anomaly. I believe it would. However this may be, the suggested designation of "Master of Laws" must, I think, be regarded as a most unhappy one. If any further degrees than those already used are to be introduced, those of Bachelor and Doctor of Laws would be the most appropriate; and they should, if introduced at all, be obtainable by the existing race of barristers on their attaining seven and ten years' standing, and performing certain exercises.

A word in conclusion. Would not the incorporation of a legal university be a suitable opportunity for the discontinuance of the frightful wig, and the substitution of the academic cap?

GREGORIUS.

LAW REFORM DRAMATISED.

THE Westminster play for the present year is "Phormio;" and on the 13th instant, being the second night of performance, the epilogue was given. It treats of law reform in this wise:—Hegio is discovered weeping over an urn, inscribed with the names of "John Doe and Richard Roe," (a tolerably old joke). Damipho, who has brought an action against Phormio for the recovery of the thirty mine, is disgusted to find that the defendant will be allowed to give evidence in his own cause. Chremes, henpecked more than ever by Nausistrata, laments the good old days, when wives could be beaten with impunity; and Dorio having been transported, has returned with a "remeatus tessera," i. e. a ticket of leave, on the strength of which he picks the pockets of his former acquaintances.

DEATH OF MR. JOHN COWLING, BARRISTER AT LAW.

THIS very eminent member of the common-law bar expired at half-past twelve o'clock on Wednesday night, the 12th instant, at his house in Albemarle-street. His death was utterly unexpected, and is attributed to some spasmodic affection of the heart. Though he had suffered a little during the last week from a bronchial affection, it had not interfered with his attendance in court during the last term, nor at chambers, till the evening of the day on which he died, and where he was engaged in his ordinary professional avocations till nearly six o'clock,

* The rank of S. C. L., commonly regarded as an academic degree, is but an apparent exception to the rule. Though considered equal to the degree of B. A., it is not, properly speaking, a degree at all, but only a token that the person possessing it has been admitted to the study of the civil law. It is, in fact, very nearly analogous to the position of a student in an inn of court.

when he walked home. He was in his fifty-fourth year, and born in Lancashire; the only son, we believe, of a physician. He became Senior Wrangler in the year 1824, and was till his marriage a Fellow of St. John's College. He was a member of the Middle Temple, and called to the bar on the 9th November, 1827, and went the Northern Circuit, where he was universally respected. On the last vacancy in the representation of the University of Cambridge, Mr. Cowling, who in politics was a Conservative, announced himself as a candidate, and would undoubtedly have received powerful support, but he withdrew in a very handsome manner in favour of Mr. Wigram. Mr. Cowling stood in the highest rank of the common-law bar, and enjoyed a very large and lucrative practice. He was distinguished for his scientific and profound knowledge of the law, and the accuracy and logical ability with which he brought it to bear on every case in which he was engaged. He was of a remarkably shy and diffident temper, and characterised uniformly by simplicity of character and honour in both private and professional life. No member of the bar was listened to by the judges with more manifest respect than Mr. Cowling, and few have been more distinguished by the masterly tact with which he detected the weakness of an opponent's case and vindicated his own. One of his latest arguments was at the close of the last term—the very important one of Hilton v. Eckersley, in error from the Queen's Bench, the question turning on the right of counter-combination by masters against their men, and which lies over for judgment till the next term. His argument was a masterly one. For the last few years he has been spoken of as likely to be raised to the bench, and no one's elevation would have secured a greater share of professional approbation.—Times.

INDIA.

(From the Times' Correspondent at Calcutta).

ONE great source of our present weakness and irresolution is now exciting considerable attention. We have no officers for new enterprises. The military and civil services are alike exhausted. . . . The civil service has diminished in practical strength, and Government is at its wits' end for men. All sorts of appointments are doubled up. Every European who has nothing to do obtains a post. Young men are placed in charge of the most important departments. The Director-General of the Post-office is barely thirty-six. The educational department has scarcely a man of thirty. Work after work is suspended, and still there are not sufficient men. The Governor-General, it is said, has recommended an extensive addition to all departments.

The Friend of India has recently published a statement which indicates the remarkable advance recently made in prison discipline in Bengal. It appears that the great difficulty, the costliness of imprisonment, has been removed. The largest gaol in the country already pays almost all its own expenses, and will speedily produce a surplus. The idea that prison labour ought never to come in competition with honest labour has been given up. The convicts weave gunny bags, make carpets, print, do all kinds of rough work, and in one place even bake bread. Surely this experiment might be tried in England. Convicts could make army clothing, even better than an association of tailors; and convicts are always clean. The Government is directing much of its attention to this question, and to the criminal law generally. The authority of the Sudder, or Court of Cassation, in criminal matters is found to be favourable to crime. The Court is apt to demand an amount of evidence which it is in this country impossible to procure, and invariably decides upon the narrowest technicalities. It is therefore proposed to intrust the power of final decision, as in England, to the sessions' judges, assisted, I believe, by a jury. Punishment will then follow rapidly on the heels of the offence. At present a murderer may be under trial for six months, and under sentence of death for two. These reforms, however, wait for a movement in England. The amalgamation of the Supreme and Sudder Courts has been promised, and is ardently desired, but nothing has been done. . . . Calcutta has amused itself by voting a statue to Sir Laurence Peel, the retiring Chief Justice of Bengal. The act is curiously illustrative of the Indian metropolis. Sir Laurence Peel has been remarkable among us for his kindness of heart and boundless pecuniary charities. He has actually given away the whole of his official income of 8000*l.* a year. Moreover, he has been an admirable judge, a little too lenient, but on the whole well deserving his native nick-name, "Apokyopati"—one who has no side in his decisions. He leaves us in ill-health by this mail; and it was felt that to omit all expression of regret would be discreditable to Calcutta. Accordingly a great meeting was called, and it was proposed to vote him an address, and raise funds for a portrait. The meeting agreed, but Mr. Peterson proposed a statue.

The Lord Advocate.—In Scotland the whole system is uniform; the public prosecutor has the charge of the case from the time the first information is given down to the conviction; that is, through an organised staff of officers, of whom the Lord Advocate is the head; and in the Crown Office the whole proceedings are filed, and consequently at any time there can be a reference to the person who has the charge of the case. In England how does your Lordship propose that that should be done; because I think one important function of the public prosecutor is the fact that he is a person responsible in Parliament to the public for the whole proceedings which take place; that would require a very large organisation in England?—I think, before your Lordship came in, I mentioned that I considered that to be the very great difficulty in the case. In Scotland there is, as you know, a procurator fiscal in many districts and in many towns, independently of the counties; so that there is a local prosecutor everywhere. In England there ought to be something of the same arrangement; and that is a very great difficulty, no doubt. The plan which we thought of in 1834 was intended, at first, to have operated within the great district of the Central Criminal Court. It did not require an act, for the Treasury were to employ the different counsel; and our view was, that becoming wise by the experience which we should have had of a year or two, we might extend it a little further, till at last we could enlarge it so as to cover the whole country. In the resolutions which I moved in March before the House of Lords upon criminal procedure, and which are still there for discussion, the sixth and seventh relate to a public prosecutor; the sixth resolution is, "That the prosecution of offenders should be intrusted to an officer appointed by the Government, with such number of subordinate officers as may be required for conducting prosecutions in the counties and larger towns; but that until such a measure can be adopted," (this is with a view to the difficulty in question), "it is expedient to appoint barristers who shall advise upon and conduct the prosecutions in the Central Criminal Court and the courts of quarter session of Middlesex and Surrey," purposely to begin experimentally. Then the seventh resolution is, "That the public prosecutor should, in all the graver cases, as the pleas of the Crown and forgery, proceed by bill before the grand jury, but in other cases should at his discretion be allowed to proceed upon commitment by a stipendiary magistrate, without any bill found." These, among other resolutions, are now under consideration in the House of Lords, and by the Government, they having, I will not say refused, but for the present declined to issue a commission to examine into the whole subject; because these eighteen resolutions extend over almost the whole of the criminal procedure. The Chancellor has pledged himself to bring in one or two bills, which are now in preparation, to carry into effect several of these resolutions; and I believe one, but which is not yet so matured that he has been able to give notice of it, will have reference to curing the defect with regard to a public prosecutor, to a certain extent. . . . I am always exceedingly slow to speak about foreign law and foreign practice, but I believe we are really the only country in which there is no public prosecutor. When I made my statement lately in the House of Lords I said that this was the case, unless in America they may have imported the English law in that respect as well as in others; but I believe there is very little doubt that they have a public prosecutor in America; I know in New York they have, for I have looked at the New York code; they have what is called the state attorney, county attorney, and the district attorney. In France no doubt they have a public prosecutor: everything is done by a public prosecutor.

In order to follow out the system fully would it not be necessary to have something like a department of public justice?—I am quite clearly of opinion, that not only in order to carry into effect this system, but that even if you never dreamt of touching the subject of a public prosecutor at all, there are a thousand other reasons why there ought to be a department of the ministry of justice. To take an instance of the want of such a department: it is hardly possible ever to sit in judgment in this country upon the construction of an act of Parliament, especially acts of recent date, without being astounded with the insufficient manner in which they are drawn. A considerable proportion of the business in courts of justice now arises from the mode in which acts of Parliament are framed; it is very much improved of late, since Mr. Coulson came into his present office; but still a single person will not suffice—there must be a board.

Mr. Phillips.—Before we quit the subject of the grand jury, in your Lordship's judgment to which error do you think the grand jury most prone, that of throwing out bills which they ought to find, or finding bills which they ought not?—My own personal and professional experience upon the subject is of very little value, for I practised very little in criminal courts; it was by mere accident that I ever went into the criminal courts while I was either upon circuit or in Westminster Hall; but I should say that it was rather by the escape of the guilty than by the trial or oppression of the innocent that the evil existed. . . . With respect to grand juries, I may mention that the difference between a public prosecutor and the grand jury system is very striking from the returns which we have, and the result of which I may be permitted to state. The number of commitments for England and Wales in the last year for which we have a return, namely, 1863, was 27,057. The number of persons tried was 25,565, there being 1472 discharged. Of those tried, 4793 were acquitted, including those against whom the grand jury threw out the bills; that is to say, the acquittals were between one-fifth and one-sixth of those tried. In Scotland, for the same year, the commitments were 3756, the persons tried 3139, and the acquittals only 279, or between one-eleventh and one-twelfth of the persons tried; so that the acquittals were twice as numerous in England as in Scotland. I took the liberty of stating that as clearly shewing the difference between proceedings instituted and conducted by experienced, professional, responsible public men, and those conducted by private individuals. Not only is there this difference between England and Scotland, that is to say, between the result of proceedings under professional superintendence and those which are not so, but it varies exceedingly in the counties in England; it varies so much as this, that the average acquittals of the whole country being between one-fifth and one-sixth of the prisoners tried, the proportion in Somersetshire is one-third, in Hampshire and Buckinghamshire between one-third and one-fourth, in Sussex about one-fifth, in Wiltshire between one-sixth and one-seventh; so that in the different counties in England it varies in the proportion of two to one.

Mr. W. Ewart.—Does your Lordship recollect that many years ago Mr. Alison, in his Criminal Practice of Scotland, stated that at that time, in Scotland, the average of convictions to acquittals was as six to one, and in England as two to one, that being a confirmation of your statement?—Yes. With respect to grand juries, without intending at all to say that they ought not to be continued, it is impossible to deny that they are a very unsatisfactory body. In the first place, there is no challenge; you cannot tell who may be upon the grand jury; one or two of the very persons that ought not to be upon the grand jury may be upon it connected with the parties, either connected with the prosecutor, or connected with the person against whom the bill is to be preferred; politically connected, as friends or as antagonists. Then there is a great variety of qualification, I may say, in the grand jury; at least, there used to be, and I do not know whether it is not so still. Generally speaking, freehold qualification used not to be necessary for the grand jury; if it is now necessary generally over the country, it is of late years that that has been so. In Yorkshire it was necessary, but not in the rest of England. Then the practice in grand juries varies very much; the practice in different counties, I may say of my own knowledge, varies exceedingly as to the mode in which they resolve to proceed, the kind of evidence that will satisfy them, and the kind of evidence which they call before them. One very great variety, no doubt, existed in Ireland till the year 1816 or 1817, when it was found, that with the exception of one or two counties, the inveterate practice in every county in Ireland was never to see a witness—they never called a witness before them. That was discovered by Sir S. Romilly and Mr. Horner, and others of us in the House of Commons, by some mere accident; we asked, and found to our astonishment that it was so; that the practice was inveterate and universal in Ireland, with the exception of one or two counties, of only receiving the depositions before the magistrate, and then, without seeing a witness, proceeding to find the bill or to ignore it. The next year a bill was brought in by Mr. Horner, supported by Sir R. Peel, who was then Secretary for Ireland, which bill was passed; and I recollect, that through delicacy towards the judges and other official persons in Ireland it was not made declaratory, though it ought to have been; but it was made enacting, as if there were some little doubt existing as to whether it was utterly illegal, no lawyer either in Ireland or in England having the shadow of a doubt that the procedure was grossly illegal. And what was the consequence of that procedure? Sir S. Romilly produced a proof of the result of this variety in the practice of grand juries in Ireland. Instead of the acquittals being one-twelfth of those tried, as in Scotland, or one-sixth, as in England, the acquittals there were in the proportion of 15 to 16 of the persons tried; 192 were acquitted out of 206 who were tried. This was evidently owing to the lax mode of proceeding, which is one of the evils, no doubt. That is an extreme case; but still there are great differences in England, it is not to be denied.

Mr. Watson.—Does not the large proportion of acquittals which take place out of the number of trials depend very much upon the laxity of committing magistrates?—It may; but a public prosecutor would remedy that.

The Attorney-General.—The public prosecutor would have to exercise his discretion upon the very same materials that the grand jury in Ireland had before the new practice was introduced, namely, upon reading the depositions; and inasmuch as the great value of all examination is rather when the witness comes to be put more or less to the torture, I take it, that so far as the grand jury are concerned, they having only to see that there is a prima facie case upon which the man is to be put on his trial, it is comparatively unimportant whether they see the witness, in order for him to make the same statement as is contained in the depositions; and to be subjected to no cross-examination at all?—I cannot help thinking that it is very important that the grand jury should see the witness; a single question addressed to the witness might put an end to the case at once. I will give a very remarkable instance of that in the case of a very excellent friend of mine; he was put upon his trial, and there was a trial before Lord Denman, which lasted twelve hours, for a conspiracy to carry a bill by bribery, in Mexico. The grand jury found a bill without the least hesitation, and the foreman of the grand jury, on coming into court, I understand from persons who were present, chuckled exceedingly when he presented a true bill against the first merchant in the world. If the grand jury had known what they were about, they would have put a question to the prosecutor, by means of which it would have been found that he owed the party charged 30,000*l.* or 40,000*l.*, and that this was in revenge because he would not forgive him that debt, and there would have been an end of the prosecution.

As the result of your very great experience at the bar, do not you believe that indictments for conspiracy, and for offences of an analogous character to conspiracy, are resorted to for the purpose of enforcing civil rights, or coercing people into doing what they cannot be obliged to do by means of civil procedure?—It is by no means rare. I was for two days once before Lord Tenterden for the defendants, in an indictment for perjury, which was evidently transferred from the Court of Chancery, where the bill was pending on the answer to which the perjury had been assigned, and we were trying at Nisi Prius a bill in equity, in fact.

Your Lordship must have known of that occurring very frequently?—Frequently, certainly.

Is it not most desirable that that class of cases should be subject to the control of a public prosecutor?—Certainly; I think it most important. Another case I might mention as shewing the errors committed by grand juries: it was before Alderson, B., I think, sitting at the Central Criminal Court; there was an indictment for forgery—the forgery of a will; and it turned out, when the case came before him, that there was no case whatever. The question was put, and it turned out that the grand jury had never taken the precaution of seeing the will, upon the forgery of which the indictment proceeded; they had never looked at the document alleged to be forged. There were two cases before the same judge (Alderson, B.) upon the Midland Circuit, of persons being kept in prison five or six months. There was a woman (one of the grossest cases that could be conceived) who was kept in prison five or six months, with all the contamination of a gaol, and all the wretchedness of her family, from whom she was taken away; and it turned out, the moment the case came to be looked at, that there was an end of it, and it was hardly allowed to come into court. The other case was that of the daughter of a prisoner; there was an indictment for murder, or manslaughter, in killing her mother by starving her, and they had chosen to find a bill against a child of twelve or thirteen years old, as well as against her father, and the child was kept in prison the whole of that time as well as the father

Where persons are put upon their trial, it is desirable, with a view to its operation upon the public mind, that only those cases should be tried in which convictions do take place, and would; it is an encouragement to persons who may have a tendency to commit crimes to find that there are acquittals, the merits of which they do not understand, and in which cases, therefore, they may be disposed to think that the parties have escaped by a lucky chance.—I think that is one of the evils of acquittals where there ought to be no acquittals, whether by defect in the law, or defect in the machinery of the law, or by carelessness.

Unnecessary prosecutions?—Unnecessary prosecutions, or negligent prosecutions. Acquittals are always most hurtful; because, as you have just suggested, they tend to the encouragement of offenders. I take for granted that the first thing which a person who is wickedly disposed does, when he is meditating the commission of an offence, is to look to the means of perpetrating it. The motive exists in his own mind; then the next thing he looks to is the chance of escape; and the first chance of escape he looks to, no doubt, is the chance of getting away, and not being seized, or not being found out, if it is a concealed offence. But the next thing he looks to is, no doubt, the chance of escape if he is arrested. He is, as all men are—wicked men among others—very sanguine in the estimate which he forms of his own chances, and he first expects to escape altogether bodily; he then thinks, "Well, but if the worst comes to the worst, I shall be caught; what chance have I then?" He then calculates the chance of escape; he takes that into his account; and all that train of thought passes through his mind in estimating whether it is worth his while to commit the offence or not, so far as it is a matter of calculation. It is, (and it goes much against many of the arguments used upon this subject), that a man is under the influence of violent passion, or of violent propensity, or of great fear and alarm about his solvency, and so forth, and that then his calculating powers are laid asleep, and that therefore, under the influence of those motives, he commits the offence. That is one of the reasons, among many others, which make one exceedingly anxious to look to prevention rather than to the effect of punishment—that is to say, prevention by good moral training, sometimes called education; but I call it good moral training, beginning with infant training; because I am afraid it is but a melancholy result which those practical administrators with whom one has discussed the subject have come to, that the effect of deterring by example is not great; certainly much less than the preventive effect of moral training.

Mr. Phillimore.—Your Lordship thinks that the appointment of public prosecutors would contribute much to the certainty of punishment?—Certainly.

And I suppose your Lordship agrees with almost all writers on jurisprudence, that the great secret to prevent crime is the certainty of punishment?—Yes, as far as deterring goes.

The Lord Advocate.—What do you think would be the effect of a public examination before magistrates and before coroners' inquests as an initial proceeding with a view to prosecution?—There are great inconveniences, no doubt, in the publicity of the examination; there is very great hardship to the party brought before the magistrate, in its publicity; there is very great annoyance and hardship to the witnesses and to the prosecutor, who are brought before the magistrate, no doubt; but against all that, one cannot help setting the great advantage of the publicity of the proceeding, both preventing any malpractices by placing the magistrate, who is then the court, in the eye of the public, and also by the great benefit which arises with a view to police, from its tendency to discover evidence, and to enable the parties prosecuting to be put upon the traces to find witnesses; so that, upon the whole, I have no doubt whatever that the benefits exceed the disadvantages of a public examination.

Has it not a rather contrary effect in some instances, namely, of affording guilty parties the means of escape?—No doubt it may have that effect. I am talking of the balance.

Mr. W. Ewart.—Does your Lordship agree in the following view which is expressed in the Eighth Report of the Commissioners on Criminal Law, in the year 1845. Summing up the subject, they say, "The existing law is by no means so effectual as it ought to be; the duty of prosecution is usually irksome, inconvenient, and barthenous; the injured party would often rather forego the prosecution than incur expense of time, labour, and money. The intrusting the conduct of the prosecution to a private individual opens a wide door to bribery, collusion, and illegal compromises?"—Certainly, generally speaking, I should agree with that. . . . That is one great evil at present existing, which I hope will be remedied by some of those measures which the Chancellor says are now being framed upon the ground of my resolutions of March last. One great hardship to poor prisoners is, that they have no means of bringing their witnesses to the trial; and it has been suggested that they might have their witnesses allowed their expenses, upon their acquittal, after the trial. But, alas! they have no capital wherewith to bring the witnesses before the trial; and it is to bring them to the trial that they are wanted. Accordingly, one of my resolutions is, to give the power to the committing magistrates to say what witnesses shall at the public expense be brought to the trial.

Has your Lordship turned your attention to the French system on that part of the subject?—They allow all expenses. It would be a dangerous thing for us to give so large an allowance as that.

The Attorney-General.—Does your Lordship think that our present system is defective in this respect, that there is no one to see that the evidence is complete, so as to insure conviction where a conviction ought to take place, between the time of commitment and the time when the bill is found, and the trial takes place. A magistrate examines and sees upon the depositions what he thinks to be a case in which a trial ought to take place; he commits the individual, and he is sent to prison, and remains there till the time of the session or the assizes. The prosecutor, who is not a man cognisant of the law, comes to the assizes or the sessions, goes before the grand jury, and prefers a bill upon the depositions; but there is no one whose office it is to look, prior to that time, to see that the evidence upon which the magistrate committed is all the evidence which can be procured, or is, at all events, sufficient evidence to prove the case?—That, no doubt, is a great defect; and by the practice which I have mentioned, where the clerk of the peace makes it a rule in some of the counties always to employ the same counsel, and to have constant communication with him in the arrangement of the evidence, and finding out the evidence, the defect is to a certain degree remedied. The evidence is examined very fully, and the counsel says, "This will not do; you must get other evidence, otherwise we must not prefer a bill."

* Vol. 1 may be had, price 11. 11s. 6d. boards.

"A mass of matter, cases, arguments, and discussions, thrown together in a work of such bulk, is like a library containing as many different works as this contains cases . . . presenting the authorities on each point in the ipsissima verba of judicial decisions, but connecting, modifying, approving, or condemning them in his own words, which will be deservedly considered of little less weight by the student than the dicta to which they relate . . . Such is the variety of topics, subdivided into an almost infinite ramification of cases and points, into which the learned author is necessarily led. Few writers, we apprehend could be found sufficiently persevering to pursue every topic in such a list with the same untiring vigour, till each in its turn was exhausted; few would have the learning, fewer still the resolution."—Law Magazine No. 22.

"We must far surpass the limits of an article were we to attempt to discuss, with any sort of completeness, the vast variety of subjects which Mr. Spence's second volume contains—subjects treated by him with a fulness of detail indispensable in a book designed, not only as a guide, pointing out to the student the great principles upon which the law in its complexities of actual business depends, and tracing the mutual connexion of those extensive provinces of equity with whose details he is expected to become familiar, but also as a storehouse, from whose well-arranged repositories the practising lawyer may readily furnish himself with the armour needed for the conflicts of the Bar."—Law Review, No. 22.

"There remains a vast amount of valuable information, both theoretical and practical, upon topics not to be found in any of the recent treatises, which must be carried to the sole credit of Mr. Spence's own original and laborious investigations; and from this results the peculiar character of the book, that it is at once terse and recherché, containing all the stock information on subjects within its scope which may be found in the current text-books, and, superadded to these, the result of an experienced lawyer's researches in neglected paths, and resums of, or criticisms (where criticism is called for) on, the most recent decisions, doctrines, and innovations of the Court of Chancery. . . . A more dense mass of living law, available alike for study, reference, and practice, has seldom been presented to the Profession."—Jurist, No. 668.

"The reader, however, will be surprised at the mass of information which it contains; all the principal branches of learning are explored. . . . There never was less book-making in any book than in this."—Law Magazine, N. 8., No. 8.

"A work which promises to be one of the most learned and philosophical treatises on the largest branch of British jurisprudence which our language has produced."—Law Times.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, DECEMBER 29, 1855.

A POINT which has recently occurred in practice, as to the exclusion of trust estates from a general devise, appears worthy of consideration, as one which is not unlikely to be of frequent occurrence, and is not satisfactorily settled by authority.

A testator, after directing that in the first place all his just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, should be paid, disposed of his personal estate, and then gave all his real estate to A. B. in fee. The testator was seized of real estates as a trustee, and the question was, whether the trust estates passed by the general devise.

The general principles applicable to cases of this description are well settled by authority. Since the decision of Lord Braybrooke v. Inskip, (8 Ves. 417), which has been followed by a train of similar decisions, it may be taken as clear, that a devise of all a testator's real estate will pass estates vested in him as a trustee, unless there be something in the will from which it may be inferred that he intended to deal only with what was his in equity, as well as at law. It is also well settled, that if the testator deal with the property comprised in the devise in a way in which he cannot deal, or ought not to deal, with property in which he has no beneficial interest, it will be inferred that he did not intend to include trust estates in the general devise. Thus, for instance, if he charges the devised property with his debts, or devises it in trust for sale, which charge and trust he cannot effectually impose on property of which he is only a trustee, the trust estates will not pass. So, if he devises the property to uses in strict settlement—a proceeding which, though it would be effectual at law as to trust estates, would be a breach of his duty to his cestui que trust—the trust estates will be held not to pass under the general words.

Now, in the above case there can be no doubt that the introductory words of the will would operate as a charge of the testator's debts upon his real estate; and it might, therefore, seem that the case falls clearly within the principle of the cases in which a charge of debts has been held to exclude trust estates from a general devise.

It is apprehended, however, that this is by no means clear, and, indeed, that the contrary conclusion is better supported by principle. It should seem, that, to make a charge cut down the natural effect of the general devise, it must appear on the will that it is not less extensive than the devise; for the argument in favour of excluding the trust estates amounts to this—"Whatever is comprised in the general devise is subjected to a charge to which the testator had no power to subject what was not his own beneficial property; therefore it must be inferred that he did not intend the general words of devise to apply to estates which he could not so charge."

Now, on the construction of the will in question, does it appear that the charge was intended to apply to all the estates which the devise was intended to include? It is apprehended that it does not. The introductory clause does not, in terms, apply to real estate at all; its words, therefore, furnish no indication of intention either way as to trust estates, and the intention must be collected by looking, not to the terms, but to the substance of the clause—to the effect which the Courts give to it. Now, if it were rendered so as to express in terms this effect, it would not run, "I charge all the real estate hereinafter devised," which, in a will not containing a residuary devise, would leave any undisposed-of real estates free from the charge of debts; nor would it run, "I charge all my real estates with" &c., which would be wide enough to include trust estates; but, "I charge all the real estate to which I am beneficially entitled with the payment of my debts, in aid of my personal estate." If the clause were worded in this way, it would be difficult to frame an argument in favour of its restricting the effect of a subsequent clause, which, apart from it, would pass trust estates; and it is apprehended that the general direction in question can have no other effect than if its substantial meaning were stated in express terms.

The case might be different if the introductory clause in terms charged all the testator's real estate, for it might then be contended that the general words must receive the same construction in the different parts of the will, and that as in the introductory clause they could be taken to include trust estates, they must receive an equally narrow construction in the subsequent general devise. This point, however, has not, it is believed, been the subject of judicial decision. It would be a strong argument in favour of the exclusion, that in such a case the charge and the devise were shewn to be co-extensive by the identity or similarity of the descriptions of their subjects.

In all the reported cases of exclusion which we have been able to discover, with the exception—if it be an exception—of In re Horsfall, which will presently be noticed more particularly, the charge and the devise were shewn to be co-extensive in another way, viz. by being incorporated together in one clause. Thus, in Doe v. Reade, (8 T. R. 118), treated by Lord Eldon in Lord Braybrooke v. Inskip as a leading case, the devise was, "and all the rest and residue of my ready money, &c., real and personal estate and effects, whatsoever and wheresoever, situate in &c., or elsewhere in the kingdom of England, after payment of my debts, legacies, and funeral expenses, I give, devise, and bequeath unto" &c. In The Duke of Leeds v. Munday (3 Ves. 348) the gift was of all the rest, residue, and remainder of the testator's estate and effects, subject to the payment of his debts and of an annuity of 30l., unto and to the use of A. B. In Ex parte Morgan (10 Ves. 101) the testator devised all his real estate to A. W., to hold to her, her heirs and assigns for ever, "subject nevertheless, and charged and chargeable with the payment of one clear annuity of 20l., to be issuing out of all and singular my said real estates." In Doe v. Lightfoot (8 M. & W. 553) the testator devised all his real and personal estates, after payment of his just debts and funeral expenses, to T. H. and E. C. H. as tenants in common in fee. In Silvester v. Jarman (10 Price, 78) the devise was followed by the words, "subject as aforesaid to the payment of my debts, legacies, and funeral expenses." In all these cases it was held that nothing passed of which the testator was not the beneficial owner. So, in Rackham v. Siddall, (16 Sim. 297), the testator devised all his real estates, whatsoever and wheresoever, unto and to the use of G. T., her heirs and assigns, charged with 50l. to his friend J. W.; and in this case the Vice-Chancellor of England held that a trust estate did not pass, though it was not necessary to decide the point. (S. C., 1 Mac. & G. 607). And Sir J. Romilly, M. R., expressed the same opinion on the same will in Hope v. Liddell, (4 Weekly Rep. 145). In all these cases the devise and charge were combined in one sentence, in such a way as to lead, in some of the cases necessarily, in the others naturally, to the conclusion that they were meant to be co-extensive.

In the case now under consideration neither of the above reasons for considering the charge to be intended to extend to everything that passed by the devise exists; and supposing the point untouched by authority, it is apprehended that the better opinion is, that the trust estates would pass.

There is, however, one case which at first sight appears to be on all-fours with that now under discussion, and to be opposed to the view taken above. In the case of In re Horsfall, (M'C. & Y. 292), the testator, after directing the payment of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, specifically devised certain real estates; "and as to all the rest, residue, and remainder of and in all and singular the property, estate, and effects which he should be possessed of or entitled to, or over which he should have a disposing power at the time of his decease, of what nature or kind soever the same might be, he gave and bequeathed the same unto J. W. and W. P., upon the several trusts thereafter declared*." It was held that an estate vested in the testator as mortgagee did not pass by the general devise, the Lord Chief Baron merely saying that it was clear upon all the authorities that it did not.

Whatever this case may have decided, its authority is, it is submitted, materially diminished by the circumstance, that the decision was on an ex parte petition, the object of which was to get the estate out of an infant heir; and the Court, therefore, only heard an argument on one side, viz. in support of the proposition that the estate did not pass by the devise. It appears, however, to be very doubtful whether the case touches the present question at all. The report is evidently a very loose one. The note of the opening speech of counsel in support of the petition does not shew on what ground it was argued that the mortgaged estate did not pass, nor does the judgment give the reason why it was held that it did not. It will be observed that the residuary devise was to a trustee. Now, the purposes for which estates are devised to trustees are in general such as would of themselves be sufficient to exclude estates vested in the testator as a trustee from a general devise. It is probable that the trusts in that case were of such a nature, and that the decision turned upon that. The reporter seems to have felt some difficulty in ascertaining the grounds of the decision, for the marginal note states merely that under a general devise an estate vested in the testator as mortgagee was held not to pass. It is apprehended, that for these reasons the case of In re Horsfall cannot be considered conclusive on the point.

It is submitted, then, that upon principle the primary effect of the general words of devise cannot, in the case supposed, be cut down so as to exclude trust estates by reference to a distinct clause, which does not in words refer to real estate at all, and which, in substance, has no reference or applicability to trust estates; and that there is no authority binding a Court to come to the conclusion that this clause has such an effect.

Reviews.

The Limited Liability Act, 1855, (18 & 19 Vict. c. 133), with Precedents of a Deed of Settlement for constituting a Company with Limited Liability under the Act, (or without Limited Liability under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110), and of a Deed of Alteration for enabling an existing Company to register with Limited Liability; and Notes on the Application of the Act, and on the Law relating to registered and other Joint-stock Companies. By THOMAS HENRY HADDAN, M. A., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, Vinerian Law Fellow, and late Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford. Post 8vo., pp. 320. [Maxwell.]

MR. HADDAN's plan is to take, first, the Limited Liability Act and then a precedent of a deed of settlement for text, and to subjoin to them notes on the statute and general law relating to joint-stock companies; his object being "to present not simply an edition of the new act, with precedents of deeds of settlement for companies registering under it, but also in the notes, as compendiously as possible, a summary or manual of the general law of joint-stock companies, and to apply that law to practice, by referring it to the different sections of the act of Parliament, and to the clauses of the deeds of settlement and alteration. The method thus followed has, of course, its disadvantages. Primarily and especially, it excludes the possibility of any regular division and classification of the subject; and that it has involved necessarily some repetition, and led possibly to some incompleteness of these and other defects, the editor is fully sensible. It has, however, it is hoped, some countervailing advantages, the principal of which, perhaps, is, that it brings the different principles and decisions which bear upon any case occurring in practice in immediate juxtaposition with and application to it." There are, we think, both logical and, so to speak, physical objections to the indiscriminate adoption of this plan, which are exemplified in the work before us. Many subjects may be advantageously treated in the way suggested, but the Limited Liability Act does not seem to be one of them. That act is founded on and takes for granted the constitution of a joint-stock company either under the provisions of the Registration Act or according to parliamentary usages, and, treating the company as an organised whole, proceeds to alter its constitution in one or two particulars. The case is much the same as when Nature, having created a tadpole, sets about changing it into a frog. Blumenbach, lecturing on the metamorphosis, would not overlay his subject with dissertations on reptile physiology in general, the skeleton and muscles, the nervous, digestive, respiratory, and circulating systems, given out by way of comment on this or that channel between the branchial and pulmonary vessels, but would confine himself to the differences, and either assume in his hearers a competent knowledge of the general subject, or give them that knowledge systematically in an introductory course. A registered joint-stock company is a highly artificial organism, created upon a consistent plan by a single act of Parliament, and cannot be advantageously studied otherwise than as a whole, and systematically. The physical inconvenience resulting from Mr. Haddan's plan is this, that the Limited Liability Act, occupying in the octavo statutes five pages, is absolutely lost among the mass of annotations, with their sub-notes, which are devoted to a statement of the various provisions contained in the thirty-five pages of the Registration Acts, and of the numerous decisions on them. On the other hand, the plan shews to advantage in its application to the precedent of a deed of settlement, where the various brief allusions to the enactments and decisions come in exactly where they are wanted, as notes to the clauses which they illustrate.

The work displays considerable learning and ability, and is evidently the result of careful research and consideration applied to every part of the subject, except that of the policy of the measure. In a "Preface on 'the Policy of the Act,'" Mr. Haddan "disclaims at once 'all idea of attempting any such critical examination of 'the merits or probable operation of the change of law 'now in question,' on the ground of want of 'leisure 'and materials,' but proceeds forthwith to defend the policy of the act. We do not understand how the Preface can be reconciled with the disclaimer it contains; but we take him at his word in believing that he has given little attention to the subject, and can only regret that he should inconsiderately have thrown the weight of his respectable name into either scale of so important a balance. As might be expected, Mr. Haddan repeats the commonplaces—that the principle of limited liability is not new in our own law; that it would be hard if a man could not limit the authority of his partner or agent to bind him; and that no creditor can complain, since he must always know the conditions of his bargain; and infers from them that the English rule of ordinary partnership liability is merely arbitrary, concluding with this startling assertion—"In no other system of jurisprudence, it is believed, 'does such a rule exist. In the French law, in the 'Scottish law, even in the laws of many of the States 'of America—which are, in effect, only the English 'law modified—and, finally, in the Roman civil law, 'the rule is different. In none does it imply liability 'in solido to the full extent of the property of every 'partner.'" We have arrived, after some investigation, at a contrary conclusion, and assert, with some confidence, that in France, Scotland, and the States of America the rule is, and always has been, the same as in England, viz. that in ordinary partnerships each partner is bound in solido by every partnership contract; the exceptions in each of those countries being matter of special and arbitrary enactment. As to the Roman law, the question of the liability of ordinary trade partners is involved in great obscurity; although Dr. Story, with his usual rashness, asserts that there was no liability in solido, on the authority of a passage in the Digest, to the effect that if A. promises to pay 100*l.* to B. and C., the latter can only claim 50*l.* each; and, conversely, if A. and B. promise to pay 100*l.* to C., A. and B. are only liable severally for 50*l.* Mr. Haddan's further citation from the Institutes merely shews that a stipulation throwing the whole burthen of the losses on one of several partners was valid inter se. Mr. Haddan passes by the great questions, whether or not, in supplying the parts of a contract which are not expressed, the law should have regard to and favour in its implications those conditions which are least conducive to the general interest, and whether or not it is expedient that the law should contrive machinery to facilitate a course of trading in which the usual stimulus to vigilance and honesty does not exist.

The Limited Liability Act, 1855, and the Acts for the Registration, Incorporation, and Regulation of Joint-stock Companies, under which Companies with Limited Liability are to be formed; with an Introduction, Notes, Forms, and Index. By GEORGE SWEET, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 8vo., pp. 287. [H. Sweet; Stevens & Norton.]

THE following is the plan of Mr. Sweet's book:—In the Introduction he considers the liability of ordinary partners, the characteristics of joint-stock companies in general, and of registered joint-stock companies in particular, and then shews how they are affected by the provisions of the Limited Liability Act. The stats. 7 & 3 Vict. c. 110; 10 & 11 Vict. c. 78; and 18 & 19 Vict. c. 133, are set forth at length (with foot-notes) in the body of the work. The Appendix contains the deed of settlement of a joint-stock company to be completely registered with limited liability, together with variations where the liability of the shareholders is not to be limited; an abstract of, and schedule to, the deed; a supplementary deed for enabling a registered company to obtain a certificate of limited liability; the declaration of payment of twenty per cent. on three-fourths of the capital of a company seeking limited liability; a petition to the Board of Trade for a license to hold lands, and the license thereupon granted. The work concludes with observations on the rule for ascertaining the debtor in mercantile transactions.

Mr. Sweet objects to the principle of limited liability, as applied, or attempted to be applied, by the recent statute, upon the ground that it will encourage reckless and fraudulent speculation, to the prejudice of honest, skilful, and industrious members of the community. He asserts a liability for debts to be a logical consequence of sharing profits; that our common law does not contain any special provision for the liability of partners in trade; and that what is often spoken of as a prohibition of partnerships with limited liability to creditors does not exist as a prohibition or restriction in law at all, it being nothing more than "a rule of evidence for ascertaining the real debtor, and a rule which solves the problem in the way most satisfactory to common sense."

With regard to the laissez-faire principle, somewhat inconsistently relied upon by the advocates of the new measure, Mr. Sweet shews that the law is guiltless of interference in the matter of partnership liability; but if it were not, that Government does and ought to interfere in many instances of private contract, e.g. with innkeepers and carriers, and in cases of duress and fraud. "What is called the principle of non-interference," he says, "when correctly stated, amounts to no more than this—that unnecessary and mischievous interference with the free agency of subjects is the besetting sin of governments, and should always be held in fear when the propriety of a particular interference is under discussion." He discusses the real meaning and effect of the condition involved in the notion of trading with limited liability, and points out the working difficulties with which it is inseparably connected. He is of opinion that profits are the reward of mercantile skill and labour; that the idle capitalist has no right to them, and should be content to circulate his capital through the channels of the public securities and mortgages; and quotes an extract from Master Tinney's excellent communication to the Mercantile Law Commissioners, containing (inter alia) these words—"I do not doubt that there are undertakings, chiefly (or entirely, I believe) of a public and of a lasting kind, which can be best or only effectually carried on by means of joint-stock companies, but I am not satisfied that any of them require or should receive the aid of limited liability."

With regard to the mode by which this alteration in the law of partnership liability is sought to be carried out, Mr. Sweet says in his Preface—"The act is worthy of its antecedents. Its operation is limited, for no intelligible reason, to joint-stock companies, which do not carry on the business of insurance—which do not divide their capital into shares of less than 10*l.*—which have not been established by charter, (admitting those which have been established by act of Parliament). It professes to provide for the admission to the benefit of the act, of companies dividing their capital into shares of less than 10*l.*, on three-fourths of the shareholders agreeing to make a change, which,

'when agreed to, cannot be effected if a single shareholder dissents from it. It carefully provides that the companies established with limited liability shall be liable to be wound up under three winding-up acts, of which one will not work and is obsolete, and the other two are exclusively applicable to the relief of shareholders with unlimited liability. It professes to require that every limited company shall have a constituency of at least twenty-five members, while it allows twenty-two of these members to retire with impunity immediately after the formation of the company. It professes to make the members liable to creditors to the amount of their unpaid subscriptions, while it allows them at any moment to escape that liability by transferring their shares to a pauper; and it abounds with provisions which have all the characteristics of an Irish bull, except its sprightliness. Thus it provides, that a company with limited liability shall not make proposals for an increase of its capital until it has registered its intention to do so; and shall not register such intention until the proposals have been made, and the increase subscribed for and paid up to the extent of twenty per cent. on three-fourths of the amount."

Non vos e fastis eximet ulla dies!
Litis amatores, eternæ pignora rixæ,
Causidicis columen, fonsque perennis opum:—
Queis spondentibus Aeneas Sidonia Dido, Muletasses nummis, tu, Menelae, Parin;
"Trojaque nunc stares, Priamique arx alta maneres," Carthago et Libycis imperitaret aquis:

Lite manum propria, hic actor et ille reus.
Omnia mutantur:—Sit terra levissima vobis—

CRATINUS.

"Demipho et e contra Phormio—quinque minæ:"
Sed quis? ehem! tun' hic, doctissime amice? quid istuc

Ornati est? Tun' hic carmina mæsta canis?
Hem! miror quod tu hisce gemellis rite parentans
Ricardo atque Johanni exequias celebres.
Heu! miserande Charon, nautum prius exige, quàm te Emungant Britonum Nisus et Euryalus,
Vana duo simulacra, oculis incognita nostris:—

HEGIO.

Paulùm oculis forsan nota, sed haud loculis.

[Enter DEMIPHO, with CRITO as his second counsel, and PHORMIO, his antagonist in the cause, following.]

CRATINUS.

Quin tu adsis animo—ecce cliens mihi Demipho, contra Phormio, cui, si vis, tute patronus eris.

DEMIPHO.

Hem! tibi quis, parasite, patronus? Visne patronum?

PHORMIO to DEMIPHO.

Hegio—

[HEGIO, examining the letter of instructions PHORMIO has just placed in his hands.]

—numquid honorarium inest? Nihil est.

DEMIPHO to PHORMIO.

Quis tibi testis adest? (PHO.) Testis? quid somnia narrae—

Non mihi teste opus est—sum mihi testis ego.

Omnia mutantur: proprias res ordine certo
Coram iudicibus pandere cuique datur.

DEMIPHO.

Hegio, an hoc verum est? (HEG.) Verum. (DEM.)
Verupne, Cratine?

CRATINUS.

Non verum. (DEM.) Quid ais tu, Crito? (CRI.)
Res dubia est.

DEMIPHO.

Hem! probè—at, at, ni prospiciam mihi, lubrica res est;
Nil non jurabit Phormio, ut est nebulo!

Heus! potius lites quam secter, iudice nullo,
Quindenæ (æquom est), Phormio, redde minas.

PHORMIO.

Ex nihilo nil fit—non vos mihi ludificavi—

DEMIPHO.

Quàm vellem corium ludificare tuum!

PHORMIO.

Psaltriam habere potes quam forsan Phædria cedit;
Dorio habet nummos—Dorio fac veniat.

HEGIO.

Damnatus furti, nullâ mercede, metalla
Effodit Australi Dorio vinctus agro—

DEMIPHO.

Dorio in exilium! (HEGIO.) Nil sacrilego nebuloni
Profuit eloquium consiliumque meum.

DEMIPHO.

Opportunus ades, frater; te quærimus ipsum;—

CHREMES.

Atqui plus opus te mihi, teque, Crito:

Omnia conturbat Nausistrata; mente repostum
Lemniacum crimen nocte dieque manet.

Nostra domus Lemni minus est habitabilis antris—
Tu sequeris lites, frater; ego fugio.

Plurimus accumbit mensis conviva, meisque
Est epulis totâ lautius urbe nihil;

At cujus sumptu fiunt hæc cuncta, marito

Est soli vetitum participare dapes.

Interea obtundens fidibus citharistria raucis

Aures, mane, die, vespere, nocte, sonat.

Forsthan hanc emeret leno, si promptus adesset,

Quindenæque mihi redderet usque minas.

Dicite, causidici, misero quid conjuge fiet?

CRITO.

Omnia mutantur: sordet sapientia avorum,
Atque hodie in pejus cuncta relapsa ruunt.

Lex olim, ne quid caperet Respublica damni,

Uxorem modico plectere fuste dedit;

Hæc sed lege viro in sponsam est concessa potestas,

Ne gravior proprio pollice virga foret;

Sed ni forte velis artem exercere molendi,

Non tangenda hodie est femina, quicquid agat.

Omnia mutantur; non vapulat amplius uxor—

CHREMES.

Verbera sed misero dat truculenta viro;

Mane "Chremedilectis" vocor—post prandia "Stilpho"—

Mane rogat nummos—vespere dilapidat.

Ah! simul ac Stilpho vocor, actum est—et mihi restat

Nil nisi præcipiti vertere terga fugâ.

Dicite, nonne licet tantillas sumere penas?

CRITO.

Ah! perquam dubium est—experiare licet—

[Enter NAUSISTRATA, with a whip.]

NAUSISTRATA.

Stilpho, inquam, Stilpho! (PHO. to CHR.) Fac, si vis scire, perfelum!

NAUSISTRATA.

Quid facis hîc? (PHO.) Quid agat? dicam ego.

(CHR.) Quin taceas.

CHREMES to NAUSISTRATA.

Hem! collaudabam me, fortunasque meas, cui

Uxor tam juvenis tamque venusta foret.

PHORMIO.

Laudabatque tuas patinas, opsonia. (CHR.) Quæ tu
Hæc, si vis, poteris nocte probare—silent.

[NAUSISTRATA proves herself the better half, and drives her lord off the stage. Meanwhile, in the background, DORIO, a returned "ticket-of-leave" convict, has been renewing his old practices by easing the young lawyers and other loungers in the court of their handkerchiefs and snuff-boxes.—GETA, a policeman, on the watch.]

DEMIPHO.

Perditur intereâ argentum—si Dorio adesset—

Sed quem? certe idem est: Dorio, tune redux?

DORIO.

Me patriæ reddit "remeatus tessera"—[producing his ticket of leave.]

(GETA). Quid sit

Scire velis? Furum plurima sunt genera—

"Sunt bona, sunt quedam mediocria, sunt mala plura,"

Pessimus at mos est omnibus unus—edunt.

Ergo ne nimio pereat respublica sumptu,

Quos delictorum ponituisse liquet,

Hos revocat patria, ut, purgato crimine, rectâ

Insistant iterum furque latroque viâ.

Hos sed adhuc pascit populus, solvitque tributa,

Indirecta licet sint, onerosa satis.

DORIO.

Confiteor cùm non "recte" ditescere possem,

Me "quocunque modo" rem meruisse meam;

Meque mei "memores alios fecisse merendo,"

Et socium sceleris sæpe habuisse Getam,

Sed nunc factorum me pœnitet ante malorum,

Pœnitet et sceleris, pœnitet atque Getæ.

Non, ut vos captem, loquor hæc, mihi credite; multis

Furtivum ingenium irons speciosa tegit.

Est redditus mihi nempe licentia sumpta pudenter—

[DORIO here picks DEMIPHO's pocket—GETA seizes him.]

GETA.

Ah! scelus hæc etiam sumpta pudenter erant:

En! sudaria Sætaba, Serica—[pulling the purloined articles from his pocket.]

HEGIO to DORIO.

Visne patronum?

Sed quid? ubi est? abiit—perditur—an potis est?

[Feeling for his lost snuff-box.]

GETA.

Quid? (HÆGIO). Pyxis mea! (GETA). Quam cum
Dorio vendiderit, tu
Eloquii capies præmia digna tui.

DEMIPHO.

Omnia mutantur certè:—sed adeste, patroni;
In jus, si placeat, Phormio, eamus. (PHORMIO).
Ohe!

In jus? in cœnam placet ire, et jus eat in me;
Vas vadibus, testam testibus antefero.

Nec tibi sint odio mutæ, Demipho, leges,
Mutatas idem spiritus intus alit.

Omne novum pocit sibi convenientia sæculum,
Stet modo Libertas, et sine labe Fides.

Gratia Diis, nondum mos est mutatus edendi;
In me post cœnam mitior esse potes.

Virtus post nummos? virtus post prandia—pransi
Munera dant homines, vera loquuntur, amant.

DEMIPHO.

Fiat—at hic maneat rerum immutabilis ordo,
Dum colimus nati, quæ coluere patrea.

Præscriptum gaudet servare Terentius orbem,
Quadruplicemque explet nostra Thalia vicem.

Hæc eadem solito resonant subællia plausu,
Et notos repetunt pulpita læta jocos.

Acta manent moresque loci; sed præterit actor,
Cui vice plus unâ fabula nulla datur.

Nos qui spectamus posthæc spectabimus; isdem
Mutatâ ripis labitur amnis aqua.

Quod vos fecistis, faciet quod serior ætas,
Nos facimus; vestris moribus adsit honos.

Romanæ exemplar linguæ, quid denique prosit,
Virtus an vitium, fabula nostra monet.

Tollentur vitæ jam mox aulæa—gerendus
Seu nobis soccus, sive cothurnus erit.

Quicquid erit, nocte hæc sententia vestra precamur
In nostrum evadat lenis, ut ante, gregem.

Causa perorata est: concurrat dextera lævæ,
Phormio nec timeat iudicis ora sui.

Lord Stanley.—Do you consider it desirable that the public prosecutor should interfere and take the initiative in cases of injury, where the parties aggrieved do not themselves desire to institute proceedings?—I should be inclined to think generally not. I can conceive a case in which it would be very painful to the party injured, and would be a great aggravation of the injury which he has received, if it were to be brought before the public. One can conceive cases of slander, cases of libel, cases even of personal violence, where the party would much rather put up with the injury he had received than be dragged before a court of justice as a witness.

The Attorney-General.—Might not that be safely left to the discretion of a proper public person?—Certainly.

On the other hand, let me put this class of cases. There may be cases of personal violence of a serious character, in which, from fear, or from other motives, the parties injured may not wish to come forward, but which at the same time operate injurious upon society; particularly cases in which brutality has been shewn by husbands to their wives, and sometimes by parents to their children; in such cases the women would be unwilling to bring them before the public for prosecution; but at the same time it would be right, and everybody would so feel it, that a prosecution should be instituted. Would it not be dangerous to lay down a rule, that in cases of personal injury the public prosecutor should not interfere without the consent of the parties aggrieved?—I should by no means lay down the rule that the refusal of the consent of the party, or the opposition of the party, to the case being proceeded with, should be binding upon the public prosecutor; but I should leave it to his discretion, so as not to make it imperative upon him to go on merely because an offence had been committed.

Lord Stanley.—You would not leave absolutely in the hands of the aggrieved party the option of overlooking the offence?—Certainly not; and for one reason, among others, that the aggrieved party might refuse, not only from motives of delicacy and of personal feeling, and dislike to bring it forward, but from sordid motives, either of fear or of money.

The Lord Advocate.—It would enable a rich party to buy up his crimes?—No doubt.

Mr. Watson.—Are you aware that the evidence is very imperfect in a large number of cases of committals by magistrates throughout the country?—I am quite aware of it; it is very often most imperfect. I believe a very great improvement in the administration of justice (it does not apply so much to committing magistrates as to sessions) would be the adoption of the plan in England which is almost universal in Ireland, of a professional chairman of sessions. I believe in almost every county in Ireland, with one or two exceptions, the assistant barrister is chosen voluntarily by the magistrates to be the chairman of the sessions. When I originally framed the County Court Act in 1830, and afterwards in 1831 and 1832, a provision was inserted placing the county court judge (he was then called the local court judge, or judge in ordinary) in the commission without qualification, with the express view, stated at the time, of his being chosen as the professional chairman of the sessions; and by the less extensive bill afterwards brought in by Lord Lyndhurst in 1845 or 1846, and which, improved, is now the law, the same provision was inserted; and the county court judge always may be, and I believe generally is, in the commission of the peace; but I am told that in no one instance have the magistrates ever chosen him for their chairman.

Does your Lordship see any objection to the committing magistrate being one of the bench of magistrates who try the prisoner if he is committed?—Yes; I have considerable doubts whether he ought to be. It signifies very little if it is a large bench; but I think, upon the whole, it is better not to be so. I know it is a very common opinion that he ought not to be.

Mr. W. Ewart.—Can your Lordship compare the system of public prosecution pursued in France with that in Scotland?—I cannot say that I know enough of either system to make a very accurate comparison; particularly of the French system. The office of Procureur-General, the old Procureur du Roi, is a very important office, and the consideration of it is attended with a good deal of difficulty. I believe it to have been the model of the office of Lord Advocate. I believe it was very much upon that that the office of Lord Advocate in Scotland was established, and among other things one analogy rather leads to this conclusion; it is a trifle, but it shews the similarity. The Lord Advocate in my time used always to be in the robing-room of the judges, to robe with the judges; and accordingly in a civil law case, at the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, when the Queen's Advocate, answering to the Lord Advocate, is present, he remains in while the judges are making up their minds upon their judgment—a prize cause, for instance. So in France the Procureur du Roi has certain quasi judicial functions; he is called a magistrate, and when strangers have withdrawn, the Procureur du Roi, the public prosecutor, remains with the Court, as he does in Scotland. That is so even in civil cases; and that is the most difficult part of the subject, and what to a foreigner is the least intelligible, as to the limits of his office; he sums up the case, even in common cases, where he is not employed, but is merely Procureur-General: he gives the Court the benefit of his advice.

The Attorney-General.—He is a sort of amicus curiæ?—A general amicus curiæ.

Is it not the great objection to the French system that the Procureur du Roi is not only the public prosecutor, but is apparently one of the judges, and that he is too apt to use his quasi judicial power as auxiliary to his functions as public prosecutor?—As to the French criminal procedure, with the exception of having a public prosecutor, and one or two other advantages over us, it is exceedingly bad. Their criminal law is very good, but it is impossible to conceive a much worse criminal procedure. There is no power of bail, for instance. I have known a most respectable man dragged through three or four departments, and imprisoned for three or four months till the assizes came on, against whom there was not the shadow of a charge; everybody admitted that, but there was no power of bailing, because the power of bailing is in proportion, not to the station of the party, or the probability of his being guilty or not guilty, but to the amount of the punishment which would be inflicted should he be found guilty: nothing can be more absurd than that.

Mr. Phillimore.—Did your Lordship ever read the preliminary discussions to the Code Napoleon with regard to the subject of the Procureur-General?—I have read a great deal of that book, and a most interesting work it is; and I will take the liberty of mentioning the authority of it, so far as regards a very interesting part of it, namely, the Emperor Napoleon's own observations in the course of the discussion. I asked a question of the French Arch-Chancellor, Cambacères, many years ago, in the year 1817; we were speaking of this book, and I said, touching the parts which related to Bonaparte, "Monseigneur, est-ce d'une fidélité parfaite?" He said, "Plutôt d'une fidélité discrète;" and nothing, I believe, could be more correct than that. Nothing was put down there that he had not said, but a great deal was left out which he had said. I wrote that in the title-page of my copy of the Conference du Code. . . . One of my resolutions suggests giving a power to the committing magistrate to cause to be advanced a certain moderate sum for the expenses of bringing witnesses. I am quite sure, from all I have both seen at the bar, and heard of by conversing with professional men who have much greater experience in criminal practice than I ever had, that great hardship is done to prisoners from the want of evidence; every man in the Profession must be aware of that.

The Lord Advocate.—In Scotland, if a man has important evidence to bring forward, and it is not able to be produced, we inform him that if he brings up his witnesses, and we think at the conclusion of the trial they were proper witnesses to be examined, he will be allowed the expenses; that is done very frequently; but we never pay until after the trial, and until after we have seen that these witnesses ought to have been brought. Sometimes the prosecutor brings up the witnesses himself, at his own expense?—The worst of all the practices in the French procedure is this—worse still than not allowing the power of bail—namely, the torture and question which the prisoner is put to upon his trial by the judge.

The Attorney-General.—The judge constantly converting himself, in the sort of intellectual contest which is going on between them, into an advocate. As your Lordship has adverted to that, I will take the opportunity of asking if you have ever considered whether one might not steer a middle course, not allowing the judge to interrogate the prisoner, whereby the judge forgets his judicial impartiality, and that he has to hold the balance, but keeping the judge as judge, and allowing the advocate, the public prosecutor, to interrogate the prisoner; whether, after all, the interrogation of the prisoner may not be the very best means of ascertaining the true state of the case?—I am perfectly clear that some change in our law upon this subject, some relaxation, is absolutely necessary. My only objection to the French procedure is, that it is the worst possible mode of doing it—namely, making the judge himself, with all his judicial functions, and character, and weight, the person to put these questions. There was a most able paper of the late Lord Denman in the Edinburgh Review many years ago upon this subject, in which it was thoroughly discussed, and, as might be supposed, most ably discussed; but I do not think he goes so far there as to say that our system is at all perfect, or anything near it; and I think it is quite compatible with the views which he takes that there should be a power given of examining the prisoner. One mode which has sometimes struck me as being a step towards it, and which might be safely taken, is, to give an optional power to the prisoner to be examined if he choose. . . .

Still, by that means he might be acquitted in this way, that not knowing beforehand what statements he was about to make, the prosecutor would not be prepared with evidence to rebut those statements, which might produce a certain impression upon the jury, and carry the point at the moment; whereas if the man, prior to the trial, were subject to an examination on the part of the public prosecutor, then if he stated things falsely, you could have and could desire no better indicie of his guilt than the falsehood which he had stated. At all events it would have weight. Therefore I am anxious to put it to your Lordship, who is so great an authority upon those matters, whether, however vicious it might be to make the judge the interrogator, if he were there to hold the scales, it might not be desirable to subject the man to examination; just the same as if any one of us had a servant upon whose character or conduct we were to pass judgment, the first thing we should do, if we thought it necessary, would be to examine him himself; and I do not see why that course should not be adopted?—Nor I either; and you will observe that as it now stands the prosecutor is subject to the fullest examination; the defendant is not subject to any. . . . My opinion is, that self-accrimination is no objection to a witness, if it is not in his own case, but in another person's case. I think that a witness ought to be compellable to answer questions, though accriminating himself, if he is the witness of another party; but that his answer should not be given in evidence against himself.

The Lord Chancellor has been pleased to appoint Robert Wilfred Skeffington Lutwidge, Esq., Barrister at Law, a Commissioner in Lunacy, vice James William Mylne, Esq., deceased.

COMMISSIONER TO ADMINISTER OATHS IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed William Gresham, Gent., of No. 32, Castle-street, Holborn, a London Commissioner to administer oaths in the High Court of Chancery.

THE LATE MR. COWLING.—The Deputy High Stewardship of the University of Cambridge, which has become vacant by the death of Mr. John Cowling, Barrister at Law, is, it is said, likely to be conferred upon Mr. John George Shaw Lefevre, M. A., of Trinity College, Assistant Clerk of the Parliaments. Mr. Lefevre was Senior Wrangler in 1818, and is a younger brother of the Speaker of the House of Commons. THE JURIST.

LONDON, JANUARY 5, 1866.

THE tendency of modern times to free capital devoted to trade from the restraints imposed by the law upon land has been most frequently exemplified in that peculiar property in trading corporations and joint-stock companies known by the name of "shares." The question has arisen in this form—whether shares in such corporation or company, when land forms a portion of its stock, are impressed with the character of realty, and subject to its incidents, or are to be regarded as mere rights to a certain proportion of personalty in the shape of profits accruing from the joint stock, of whatever it may consist?

In some instances the act of Parliament incorporating the company, or otherwise providing for its operations, expressly declares that the shares shall be deemed personal estate, and then no further question arises upon the point. (Bradley v. Holdsworth, 3 M. & W. 422; Thompson v. Thompson, 1 Coll. 381). But, in the absence of such legislative declaration, it becomes a matter of some nicety to determine the exact position of the property in question.

In equity, realty held for the purposes of trade has uniformly been treated as personalty, with reference to matters of title, of account, and the like, arising among the partners themselves, or those who have agreed to become partners in the undertaking. (Phillips v. Phillips, 1 My. & K. 649; Townsend v. Devaynes, Id. 662, note (b); Fereday v. Wightwick, 1 Russ. & M. 45; Story v. Lord Windsor, 2 Atk. 630; Jefferys v. Smith, 1 J. & W. 298; Crawshaw v. Mawle, 1 Swanst. 496; Curling v. Flight, 6 Hare, 41; S. C., 2 Ph. 613).

But with regard to the Statutes of Frauds and of Mortmain, when it has become necessary to decide whether shares in a trading co-partnership holding land as a part of its stock-in-trade are an "interest in land" within their enactments, this distinction has been drawn in many cases, both at law and in equity—that if the company be incorporated, or if the land be vested in trustees for the purpose of making profit therefrom, and of dividing the profit among the shareholders, the shares of the individual members in such company do not represent an interest in land so as to come within those statutes; but it has been said to be otherwise if the company is unincorporated, or the land not vested in trustees. (See Bligh v. Brent, 2 Y. & C. 268—Chelsea waterworks—Statute of Frauds; Watson v. Spratley, 10 Exch. 222—Shares in a mine—Statute of Frauds; March v. The Attorney-General, 5 Beav. 433; 6 Jur., part 1, p. 829, S. C.—Policies of insurance; Sparling v. Parker, 9 Beav. 450; 10 Jur., part 1, p. 448, S. C.—Gas-light and Dock Companies—Mortmain; Hilton v. Giraud, Id. 459, note; 1 De G. & S. 183; 13 Jur., part 1, p. 323, S. C.—The London Dock and West India Dock Companies—Mortmain; Walker v. Milne, 11 Beav. 507; 13 Jur., part 1, p. 933, S. C.—Dock and Canal Company—Mortmain; Myers v. Perigal, 11 C. B. 90; 16 Jur., part 1, p. 21; S. C., in Chancery, 2 De G., Mac., & G. 599; 17 Jur., part 1, p. 145—Joint-stock bank—Mortmain; and Ashton v. Lord Langdale, 15 Jur., part 1, p. 868—Banking company—Railway scrip—Debentures—Mortmain).

This distinction, however, was denied by the Master of the Rolls in the recent case of Ware v. Cumberlege, (1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 745), in which that learned judge held, that shares in the Grand Junction Waterworks Company, incorporated by statute, were within the Mortmain Act. In delivering judgment his Honor said, "I think that the distinction cannot be supported which has been attempted to be drawn between the cases of land held by an association of individuals and an incorporated company—namely, that the fact of the incorporation alters the nature of the interest of the shareholders, and makes the holding no longer obnoxious to the provisions of the Mortmain Act. This seems to me so fine and delicate a distinction as to be likely to lead to serious difficulties. It is one of the greatest evils to create distinctions of this kind, while the best exposition of the law will be always found in laying down broad and general principles. I doubt also whether such a distinction as this can be supported by reason. The distinction is of a very singular character; it is, that the members do not hold the land in their individual character, but among them in their corporate character; and thus, under the shadow of a name, it is attempted to be made out that what they really possess in their corporate name is something different from what they would possess in their individual character. The view which I have always taken of this class of cases is, that where the substance of an undertaking is dealing with land, then, whether incorporated or not, the company falls within the provision of the statute. In the case of a banking company a distinction is fairly drawn, as its business does not necessarily involve a dealing with land. I express no opinion as to Myers v. Perigal, which does not govern the present case. In the present state of the authorities, I am very much disposed to decide according to my own view of the law. . . . In many cases, where testators have given their property to charities to the exclusion of their families, I have been disposed to think that no public advantage would be gained by relaxing the provisions of the Mortmain Act; and accordingly, where there has been no clause in the acts of Parliament incorporating canal and water companies, providing that the shares shall be personal estate, which altogether varies the case, I have held that the shares in such companies are obnoxious to the provisions of the statute, and ought to be treated as such." The case, however, of Ware v. Cumberlege must be taken to be overruled, and the distinction between corporate and unincorporated companies to be again set up by the Lord Chancellor in Edwards v. Hall, (1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1189), affirming the decision of Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., that shares in canal, waterworks, and gas companies (as well as Bank stock and arrears of rent) are not within the Statute of Mortmain if the companies be incorporated, although they hold land for the purposes of their business. "It has long been settled," said the Lord Chancellor on this occasion, "that money secured by a mortgage of land is land within the meaning of the statute; and on very intelligible grounds. . . . So as to money charged on land. . . . But the question now for decision is, as to the shares in incorporated companies. In these cases there is always of necessity some land vested in the company, in the concerns of which the shareholder is interested; and what I have to say is, whether a share in such a company is an estate or interest in land. These words, 'estate or interest in land,' are words of a very extensive import, and it is not a matter of surprise that from their vague generality they have given rise to some contrariety of decision. Now, I cannot disguise from myself, that if the point were now to be decided for the first time, there are (so, at least, it seems to me) forcible arguments in favour of the proposition that shares of this description are interests in land. The share derives, in many cases, its original, if not its only, value from the use of land. In the case of incorporated companies, if all the shares should become concentrated in one shareholder, (I put an extreme case certainly, though not an impossible one), that shareholder would at once become absolute owner of the whole property of the company, including the land. Why, then, it may be asked, while he is the owner of some only of the shares, is he not the owner of a proportional part of it? On the other hand, every one must feel, that in contending that such shares are interests in land, he is attributing to them a quality which no kind of authority ever understands them to possess. Such a conclusion must be arrived at, if at all, by refined reasoning on the legal qualities of such property, not obvious to the ordinary apprehension of the shareholders themselves; and therefore, whatever doubt there might be if the question were res integra, and to be now decided for the first time, I am glad to think it is, as it appears to me, settled by decision. The case of Myers v. Perigal had the sanction first of the Court of Common Pleas, and afterwards of Lord St. Leonards in this court. That authority seems to me to decide the question of the shares now in dispute. In Myers v. Perigal there was no charter or act of Parliament*. The company in that case was a mere self-constituted joint-stock company. By the terms of the deed of partnership they were to be at liberty to purchase land; and it was found as a fact that their property consisted of (amongst other things) certain freehold and copyhold hereditaments, and money due on mortgage of freehold, copyhold, and leasehold hereditaments. There it was held, after long and able arguments in both courts, that the shares were not interests in land, and therefore not within the 9 Geo. 2, c. 36. By that authority I feel bound, according as it does with a great number of previous cases, and with, as I believe, the general understanding of the community. If that be the law as to the shares in a company not incorporated by charter or act of Parliament, it must be so as to the shares in companies which are so incorporated, and where the lands are held by the corporation itself, being a body, in theory at least, distinct from the shareholders of which it is composed. I do not feel called on to review or discuss the previous cases. I consider the question to have been settled by Myers v. Perigal, from which I have neither the right nor the inclination to depart."

There is still a very important question remaining, which cannot be said to have been expressly decided, namely, whether shares in a trading company holding land for the purposes of its trade, the company not being incorporated, and the land not being vested in trustees, constitute an interest in land within the Statutes of Mortmain or the Statute of Frauds? We propose to discuss this branch of the subject upon a future occasion.

MR. BARON PARKE.—The Profession will be gratified to learn that this eminent judge has been elevated to the Peerage.

COMMISSIONER TO ADMINISTER OATHS IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed Thomas Wake Ratcliff, Gent., of Dean Colet House, Stepney, Middlesex, to be a London Commissioner to administer oaths in the High Court of Chancery.

The Commissioners in Lunacy have (with the approbation of the Lord Chancellor) appointed John Forster, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, to be their Secretary, on the resignation of R. W. S. Lutwidge, Esq., appointed a Commissioner.

DEATH OF THE COUNTY COURT JUDGE FOR LEICESTERSHIRE.—We have to announce the death of J. D. Burnaby, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, and Judge of the Leicestershire County Court. He died at Torquay on the 29th ult., after a few days' illness.

* "Shares in a banking company, where the shareholders were entitled to the profits only, and the real estate was vested in trustees, were held not to be within the Mortmain Acts, first by the Court of Common Pleas in Myers v. Perigal, and confirmed by Lord St. Leonards." (Per Parke, B., in Watson v. Spratley, 10 Exch. 245). The learned baron distinguished this case from ordinary partnerships upon the fact of the land being vested in trustees.

COPYRIGHT.

It has been decided in Scotland, in the case of The Rev. H. Davies v. The Proprietors of The Witness, that letters sent to the editor of a paper for insertion do not become, even for the time, his property, but that the writer may, if he alter his intention, claim them back again before publication.

Another flaw, it is believed, has been found in the Copyright Act. If our Courts of law shall rule according to the letter of the international convention—and we do not see how they can avoid such ruling—a mode of evasion has been discovered which will enable Americans, as well as all other aliens, to secure a copyright for their works in this country. An experiment, having for its object to unsettle the law once more, is being made in the case of an Italian, Signor Ruffini, author of “Lorenzo Benoni” and “Doctor Antonio,” two tales written in English, and intended chiefly for circulation in England. Anticipating for “Doctor Antonio,” which has just appeared, a popularity equal to that which attended “Lorenzo Benoni,” Signor Ruffini’s publishers, Messrs. Constable & Co., of Edinburgh, were led to look into the state of the law. They found that though the English law alone offered no security, the French law of copyright, taken in connexion with the international copyright convention between France and England, seemed to furnish it. Mr. Burke, in his “Analysis of the Copyright Laws,” says—“According to the law of France, a French subject does not injure his copyright by publishing his work first in a foreign country. It matters not where that publication has taken place, the copyright forthwith accrues in France, and on the necessary deposit being effected, its infringement may be proceeded against in the French courts. Moreover, as foreigner publishing in France will enjoy the same copyright as a native, and this whether he has previously published in his own or any other country or not.” Then comes the plesantry. By the first article of the International Convention of 1852 it is provided that the “authors of works of literature and art, to whom the laws of either of the two countries do now or may hereafter give the right of property or copyright, shall be entitled to exercise that right in the territories of the other of such countries, for the same term and to the same extent as the authors of works of the same nature, if published in such other country, would therein be entitled to exercise such right; so that the republication or piracy in either country of any work of literature or art published in the other shall be dealt with in the same manner as the republication or piracy of a work of the same nature first published in such other country.” Here the text is clear. Publication in France confers copyright in that country, and the holder of such copyright in France becomes, in virtue of the convention of 1852, entitled to copyright in England! Let Signor Ruffini or Mr. Prescott first publish in Paris; he may then come to London, and offer Mr. Murray or Mr. Bentley a legal monopoly of his works. Such, at least, is the new reading of the law which has been acted on in Signor Ruffini’s case. His “Doctor Antonio” was published first in Paris (in English) by Galignani, all the formalities required by the French law being complied with; and thus, it is supposed, no copies of the work can be published in Great Britain except those issued by the Edinburgh publishers. Of course, the convention with France never contemplated the admission of Americans to its benefits; still, an American holding a French copyright (which he can easily hold) becomes, quoad copyright, a Frenchman, and is entitled, on the above interpretation, to the protection of the convention. Here is another and most powerful argument in favour of a revision of the law of copyright, as well as of the conventions to which it has given rise.—Athenaeum.

PUBLIC PROSECUTORS.

Mr. Phillips.—Do you think that the chances of acquittal generally increase or diminish with the inferiority of the Bar: for instance, there are a few sessions left where no persons but attorneys practise; in others there are barristers of not much experience; in others barristers of very considerable experience: how do you think the bearing is generally as regards the superiority of the court; is it in favour of convictions or of acquittals?—I apprehend that it is in favour of convictions where there is a Bar attending, because the prosecutions are better conducted.

Therefore, in estimating the number of acquittals, the inferiority of a particular Bar may have an effect in producing that result?—It may, no doubt; but that want of a Bar is one of the great evils of local judicature which one is feeling at every turn. All the present system of county courts is exceedingly affected by the want of a local Bar: that is the great difficulty.

Mr. Phillimore.—May I take it that your Lordship agrees with this answer of my Lord Denman with regard to the general state of the question—"Our procedure for the purpose of preliminary inquiry is open to great objection. The injured party may be helpless, ignorant, interested, corrupt; he is altogether irresponsible, yet his dealing with the criminal may effectually defeat justice. On general principles, it would evidently be desirable to appoint a public prosecutor?"—Yes.

Has your Lordship any plan to suggest with regard to the machinery by which the evil may be remedied?—That is very difficult indeed; for the very crude sketch of a plan which we had in 1834 amounted really to little more than this—let us begin and try; let us proceed tentatively, and then see whether, wise by experience, we are not able to hit upon some mode which shall effect at least some of the good we want, and may not be liable to the objections; and then, after that, we shall be able to put it into shape. But at present the difficulty is very great of having in every county or two counties in England a local public prosecutor.

Would your Lordship think this system objectionable, namely, not to have anybody resident except a district agent, for the purpose of collecting and methodising the evidence, to whom, in case of injury, the injured party might go; but to have chosen from the members of each circuit two or more gentlemen to fill the office of public prosecutor, and to undertake the management of prosecutions, not obliging those two or more barristers to reside always upon the spot, to which I think there would be many objections?—I think there would be a very great advantage gained by even one part of your proposition being adopted, by having a local agent to superintend the preparation of the evidence and the getting up of the case, as it were, which should be brought before the grand jury, even if it went no further than that, the agent having the benefit of a locally resident counsel.

The objection with which I have been most frequently encountered, with regard to the appointment which is suggested to your Lordship, has been this, that it would give such prodigious patronage to the Crown; does your Lordship think that that is—I will not say a serious objection—an objection it certainly is; but does your Lordship think it an insuperable objection?—I should say that it is an objection which one might overcome. For example, I had a great objection formerly to county courts, for fear of the great increase of patronage of the Crown; but feeling the absolute necessity of having some local judicature, I must say I got over that objection as early as 1830. These deputies ought to be irremovable. . . .

I propose that the two Chief Justices and the Lord Chancellor shall have the power of removing them, in case of negligence or misconduct?—I consider that it should be so, decidedly. Dum bene se gesserint includes not merely corruption, but inefficiency, or other defects—a very bad temper, for instance.

Then I understand your Lordship to be clearly of opinion that the appointment of attorneys to digest and methodise the evidence for the prosecution in certain districts is clearly desirable?—Clearly desirable, even if it stops there for the present. I look forward to its being possible by degrees to extend it, even to making it a complete system; but I have no hope of that being done at present.

Then your Lordship has no particular suggestion further to make with regard to the machinery by which this system should be carried into effect?—None whatever. I think it ought to be done experimentally, tentatively, and that you should begin upon a moderate scale if you can. According to the scale which I suggested, it would be the Central Criminal Court, which is as large as all Scotland in point of jurisdiction.

Mr. Watson.—Is your Lordship aware of the mode in which the prosecutions are conducted in Liverpool and Manchester by a person in the nature of a public prosecutor?—In my time, on the circuit, the clerk of the peace generally employed the same counsel to prosecute and to draw the indictment.

I believe in Liverpool there is a person in the nature of a public prosecutor, who gets up all the prosecutions, receiving a stated salary?—Just so; and in the West Riding, and in Durham and Northumberland, the same counsel are always employed.

There they are not paid by salary, I believe?—No.

The Lord Advocate of Scotland gave the following Account of the Scotch System.

The system proceeds upon the principle, that it is the duty of the State to detect crime, apprehend offenders, and punish them, and that independently of the interest of a private party. The Scotch system acknowledges the right of a private party to prosecute; but the duty of the public prosecutor is altogether irrespective of that. The staff, if I may so call it, of the public prosecutor is as follows:—The Lord Advocate is the head of the criminal department; under him he has four advocates-depute, and these do the business that a barrister properly does in criminal cases; their duty is to advise in the proceedings while they are going on, in the collection of evidence in the country, and, when the evidence is completed, to draw the indictment, and to attend the trial, and take the ordinary part in procuring a conviction. The Solicitor-General is also, in his criminal capacity, a depute of the Lord Advocate; he holds a deputation from the Lord Advocate as such. There is a Crown agent, who is the Crown attorney of the Lord Advocate, appointed by him, and subject to his orders, and removable with the Lord Advocate; he is a political officer, and he goes out of office with the Lord Advocate; but the Crown Office is permanent, and consists of a considerable number of clerks, who are not changed in practice with the Government. The advocates-depute do go out with the Government; so that the political staff substantially consists of the Solicitor-General, appointed by the Crown; the advocates-depute, who are appointed by the Lord Advocate; and the Crown agent. The means of detecting and punishing crime in the country consist in the first place of the procurator fiscal; there is a procurator fiscal for each county, and a procurator fiscal for some of the larger boroughs. In the counties he is appointed by the sheriff; in the boroughs he is appointed by the town council; but he is directly under the orders of the Lord Advocate and his depute. The mode in which the system operates is this. The procurator fiscal receives information that a crime has been committed; his duty is to make immediate inquiry; if any person is suspected, he applies to the sheriff for a warrant to apprehend him; he does apprehend him, and the party is taken before the sheriff for examination, and upon that occasion the declaration is taken; the party is cautioned that he need not speak unless he likes, and then he is asked by the procurator fiscal, in the presence of the sheriff, any questions which seem to be material; and his answers are taken down, and may be used against him in evidence. Then, if there appears to be ground for an immediate warrant to commit, he may be committed at once; the usual course is to commit him for further examination, and then the procurator fiscal takes what is called a precognition—that is to say, he examines the witnesses whom he can discover, not publicly, but privately; they are not properly depositions, but they are statements taken down by the fiscal, and signed by the witnesses; and if the case is at all of importance to warrant it, he sends this precognition to the Crown agent. The witnesses may be examined on oath; but this is not usually done unless the witness is reluctant. The precognition is sent by the Crown agent to the advocate-depute of the district in which the crime has been committed; it is his business to read it over, and if he is satisfied, may order no further proceedings; or he sends down to the fiscal to have the party committed until liberated in due course of law, if that has not been already done, and proceeds to indict; but if the advocate-depute is not satisfied, he either sends it back to the fiscal for further investigation, or he comes to consultation with the Lord Advocate. We meet twice a week, and where the advocate-depute has any difficulty, he brings it to consultation, and in that way great uniformity is obtained, both in prosecuting and in the preliminary proceeding. Then the question is, where the party is to be tried. He may be tried before the sheriff, or before the circuit, or before the High Court of Justiciary. If it is a small offence, such as an ordinary theft, the general course is to send the party to be tried by the sheriff, either with or without a jury, and then the procurator fiscal attends and prosecutes. If, on the other hand, the party is an old offender, and he is indicted at the circuit, the advocate-depute attends. If it is a serious offence, or committed within the home circuit, he is tried before the High Court of Justiciary; and in that way it appears to me that the machinery works remarkably well. How it would do upon a larger scale I can hardly say; but from Scotland being limited in extent, so far as my experience goes, I think it answers all the objects of such an institution very well indeed. I can say, from my own experience, that it operates fully as much in the protection of innocent persons against unfounded accusations as it does in the detection of crime; and for my own part I think that the want of publicity in the first examinations, if you have, as we have, a sufficient check in the superintendence such as I have described, tends very much indeed to the detection of the guilty; and I do not believe that our procurators fiscal would think it any advantage to have the witnesses examined in public. That is the system which we follow. These consultations, which we hold twice a week, have been found to be of very great advantage, because they methodise the law; and I think the whole criminal procedure is now reduced into a very uniform and good system. . . . Generally a leading attorney in the county town is the procurator fiscal. . . . There are four advocates-depute. . . . They are practising barristers, and reside in Edinburgh. They are paid about 500*l.* a year. . . . I think that in England it would be impossible to make the system work as it does in Scotland, without having a special department for the purpose of superintending the administration of criminal justice. At the same time, I think that a staff of advocates-depute, as we call them—that is to say, a staff of barristers in London, but considerably larger—would be able to overtake the work. . . . There is no allowance, properly speaking, for witnesses of prisoners; it depends very much upon the particular case whether assistance is given or not. I have it in my power either to direct the procurator fiscal to include particular witnesses in the Crown list; or if a representation is made of a very important witness or a very poor person, we make an arrangement with those acting for the prisoner, that in the event of its appearing to be a reasonable case after trial, an allowance shall be made. . . . I think it right to say, that while the Scotch system is remarkably well adapted, in my opinion, for the detection of crime, (much more so than a system of great publicity), it seems to me essential, in order to make that system safe in a free country, that there should be a very direct responsibility.

Mr. W. Ewart.—Is it your opinion that it is of great advantage to the administration of criminal justice in Scotland that the Lord Advocate is a member of the House of Commons?—I think the system would be quite intolerable without it, because it would put in his power that which should not be in the power of any man who is not responsible to Parliament.

Therefore you suggest, supposing there were such an officer as a Minister of Justice, that he should be a member of the Legislature?—My idea is that he should sit in Parliament like any Secretary of State.

Mr. Phillimore.—In Scotland the tremendous power which exists arises from the fact, that practically the Lord Advocate has the power of saying that a man shall or shall not be prosecuted?—Not merely prosecution, but the power of restraining liberty.

Supposing it is still practically left open to the aggrieved person to carry on his prosecution, though the public prosecutor refuses to assent to it, that reason would not be so strong?—No; and probably in England it might operate as a check; in Scotland it would not, because the system is so settled.

Mr. Watson.—Has any complaint ever been made in times of political commotion of this power of the Lord Advocate to prosecute?—No doubt, in the political prosecutions at the end of the last century and the beginning of this, there was a great deal of complaint about it.

Mr. Walpole.—That might arise again in the event of political excitement running high?—It might, and very probably would; but, at the same time, the stringency of the Crown law has been a good deal relaxed since then. At that time the judges chose the jury, the list was that of the judges, instead of balloting as they do now; and there are various other improvements.

The juries have much greater power than they had?—Much more real power.

Mr. Watson.—What is the number of the jury?—Fifteen; and the majority decide.

Mr. Phillimore.—I understand you to say that the Scotch system gives satisfaction to the people?—I should say very great satisfaction, and the results necessarily lead to it.

DART'S VENDORS AND PURCHASERS.

A COMPENDIUM of the LAW and PRACTICE of VENDORS and PURCHASERS of REAL ESTATES; comprising the Authorities down to the Time of Publication. By J. HENRY DART, Esq., Barrister at Law. Second Edition. In 8vo., price 21s. boards.

"In the case of Ware v. Lord Egmont the Vice-Chancellor referred to this work in these terms:—'A learned text-writer on this subject, Mr. Dart, in a book of very great merit, his 'Vendors and Purchasers,' enters into a disquisition on this judgment,' &c."—18 Jurist, p. 372.

"In conclusion, we recommend this work to the practitioner as a complete book, and one that will warrant his confidence, and furnish able assistance in all matters relating to the sale and purchase of estates; and we think no better book can be read by students, for the purpose of giving them a condensed view of the subject, and enabling them to see the application of those principles and rules with which a general study of the law has furnished them."—Law Student's Magazine.

"Mr. Dart's labours have produced in this compendium a readable book for the use of beginners. He has paid particular attention to the attainment of a logical arrangement, and a clear and concise style. . . . Without sacrificing its character as an elementary treatise, Mr. Dart has also made an useful book of practice. . . . The work is well worthy of a place, not only in the general library, but in that selection of books which the working lawyer looks upon as his best tools; which come most readily to his hand, and which he gets to look upon as a part of himself."—Law Review, May 1, 1851.

"The work is short, readable, and very accurate. . . . With these quotations we will close our notice of a work which is obviously prepared with great care, and will, we think, become a standard text-book."—Jurist, March 2, 1851.

"Its plan is well arranged, the cases are carefully collected, the law is clearly expounded, and in every part of the treatise there is a great deal of learning. . . . The style is singularly compact."—Law Times, March 8, 1851.

An Act to explain and amend the Lunacy Regulation Act, 1853. [26th April, 1855.]

Sect. 1. Lord Chancellor, in matters of lunacy, enabled to empower committees of estates to grant leases binding on issue or remaindermen.

2. Interpretation.

Whereas by the section numbered 129 of an act passed in the 16 & 17 Vict., intituled "An Act for the Regulation of Proceedings under Commissions of Lunacy, and the Consolidation and Amendment of the Acts respecting Lunatics so found by Inquisition, and their Estates," it was enacted, that where a lunatic is seised or possessed of or entitled to land in fee or in tail, or to leasehold land for an absolute interest, and it appears to the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as in the said act mentioned, to be for his benefit that a lease or underlease should be made thereof for terms of years, for encouraging the erection of buildings thereon, or for repairing buildings actually being thereon, or otherwise improving the same, or for farming or other purposes, the committee of the estate may, in the name and on behalf of the lunatic, under order of the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, make such leases of the land, or any part thereof, according to the lunatic's estate and interest therein, and to the nature of the tenure thereof, for such term or terms of years, and subject to such rents and covenants, as the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, shall order: and whereas it has been considered that the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, cannot by force of the said enactment empower the committee of a lunatic tenant in tail to grant leases as extensively as was intended by the said enactment, which will bind his issue in tail and the remaindermen: and whereas it is expedient to explain and enlarge the power of the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, in the matter aforesaid: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. Where a lunatic is seised of or entitled to land in tail, and it appears to the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, to be for his benefit, the committee of the estate may, in the name and on behalf of the lunatic, under order of the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, make any such leases of the land, or any part thereof, as in the said section of the said act are mentioned, and every such lease shall be good and effectual in law against the lunatic and his heirs, and all persons claiming the lands entailed by force of any estate tail which shall be vested in such lunatic, and also against all persons, including the Queen's most excellent Majesty, her heirs and successors, whose estates are to take effect after the determination of, or in remainder or reversion expectant upon, such estate tail, according to such estate as is comprised and specified in every such lease, in like manner as the same would have been good and effectual in law if the lunatic at the time of the making of such leases had been lawfully seised of the same lands comprised in such lease of a pure estate in fee-simple to his own use, and had been of sound mind, and not the subject of a commission of lunacy, and had himself granted such lease; and every person to whom from time to time the reversion expectant upon the lease shall belong after the death of the lunatic shall and may have such and the like remedies and advantages, to all intents and purposes, against the leasee, his executors, administrators, and assigns, as the lunatic or his committee would or might have had against him or them; and the powers given by sections numbered 130 and 131 of the said recited act shall and are to operate as extensively as the power given by the said sect. 129 of the said act as explained and enlarged by this act.

2. Where any of the expressions in this act are used in the said recited act, they shall receive the same interpretation in this act as by the said recited act is imposed upon them.

Whereas an act of Parliament was passed in the 1 & 2 Vict. [c. 110], intituled "An Act for abolishing Arrest on Mesne Process in Civil Actions except in certain Cases, for extending the Remedies of Creditors against the Property of Debtors, and for amending the Laws for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors in England;" and another act in the 2 & 3 Vict. [c. 11], intituled "An Act for the better Protection of Purchasers against Judgments, Crown Debts, Lis Pendens, and Fiats in Bankruptcy;" and another act in the 3 & 4 Vict. [c. 82], intituled "An Act for further amending the Act for abolishing Arrest on Mesne Process in Civil Actions:" and whereas the provisions of the said acts respecting judgments, decrees, orders, and rules, and lis pendens, ought to include and be applicable to the counties palatine of Lancaster and Durham, and the common-law and equity courts thereof respectively: and whereas an act was passed in the 13 & 14 Vict. [c. 43, s. 24], intituled "An Act to amend the Practice and Proceedings of the Court of Chancery of the County Palatine of Lancaster," by force whereof the said provisions do to some extent include and are applicable to the county palatine of Lancaster, as far as regards the Court of Chancery thereof: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. Any judgment of the Court of Common Pleas of the county palatine of Lancaster, or of the Court of Pleas of the county palatine of Durham, obtained before the coming into operation of the said act of the 1 & 2 Vict. [c. 110], and not already registered in the said courts respectively under the provisions of the same act, and which shall not be registered in the said courts respectively under the same provisions as amended by this act on or before the 1st November, 1855, shall not after that day affect any lands, tenements, or hereditaments in the said counties palatine respectively, as to purchasers, mortgagees, or creditors, unless and until such memorandum or minute of such judgment as is in the said act prescribed shall be left with the prothonotary of the court in which the judgment has been obtained, who shall forthwith enter the same in manner by the same act as amended by this act directed in regard to judgments thereby authorised to be registered, and shall be entitled for every such entry to the sum of 2s. 6d.; and the provision for re-registration, toties quoties, hereinafter mentioned, as explained by this act, is hereby extended and applied, mutatis mutandis, to judgments registered under this present provision.

2. And be it declared and enacted as follows:—The provisions contained in the sections of the act of the 1 & 2 Vict. [c. 110], numbered respectively 18, 19, and 20, giving to certain rules of courts of common law, and decrees and orders of courts of equity, the effect of judgments in the superior courts of common law, and constituting the persons therein mentioned judgment creditors, and giving to courts of equity the powers by the same act given to the judges of the said superior courts, and giving to the persons so constituted judgment creditors as aforesaid such remedies as are therein mentioned, and authorising the registration of such decrees, orders, and rules as aforesaid, and providing for the writs to be sued out of courts of equity, shall extend and are applicable, mutatis mutandis, to the said counties palatine and the courts of common law thereof respectively, and to the Court of Chancery of the county palatine of Durham, within the limits of their respective jurisdictions, to the end that the same law in the respects aforesaid may apply to the courts of the said counties palatine, and the decrees, orders, judgments, and rules thereof, so far as relates to lands, tenements, and hereditaments within the jurisdiction of such courts respectively, as under the previous statutes amended by this act will regulate the operation of judgments in the superior courts of common law; but no judgment, decree, order, or rule of any court shall bind lands, tenements, and hereditaments in the said counties palatine respectively, as against purchasers, mortgagees, or creditors, unless and until such memorandum or minute thereof as hereinbefore is mentioned shall be left with the prothonotary of the palatine court in which are situated the lands, tenements, and hereditaments intended to be charged thereby.

3. The provisions contained in the sections of the said act of the 2 & 3 Vict. [c. 11], numbered respectively 3, 4, 5, and 7, and in the section of the said act of the 3 & 4 Vict. [c. 82], numbered 2, respecting the particulars to be inserted in the register by the Master, and respecting the re-registration of judgments, decrees, or orders and rules, and respecting the registration and re-registration of his pendens, and respecting the protection of purchasers, mortgagees, and creditors, as explained or amended by this act, shall extend and are applicable, mutatis mutandis, to the counties palatine and the courts of common law and courts of chancery thereof respectively, within the limits of their respective jurisdictions.

4. And whereas the protection afforded to purchasers, mortgagees, and creditors by the said act of the 3 & 4 Vict. [c. 82], against judgments, decrees, orders, or rules not duly registered, any notice thereof notwithstanding, is confined to judgments, decrees, orders, or rules binding by virtue of the said act of the 1 & 2 Vict.: and whereas the docket or register previously in use has been closed, and the said provision ought not to be so restricted: be it therefore enacted, that no judgment, decree, order, or rule which might be registered under the said act of the 1 & 2 Vict. shall affect any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, at law or in equity, as to purchasers, mortgagees, or creditors, unless and until such a memorandum or minute as in the said act in that behalf mentioned shall have been left with the proper officer of the proper court, any notice of any such judgment, decree, order, or rule to any such purchaser, mortgagee, or creditor in anywise notwithstanding.

5. And whereas it is expedient that certain doubts which have arisen upon some of the provisions for the protection of purchasers against judgments in the said acts contained should be removed: be it therefore declared and enacted as follows:—The provision contained in the section numbered 2 of the said act of the 3 & 4 Vict. extends and shall be deemed to extend as well to the act therein referred to as to the section numbered 4 of the said act of the 2 & 3 Vict., as explained by this act, so that notice of any judgment, decree, order, or rule not duly re-registered shall not avail against purchasers, mortgagees, or creditors, as to lands, tenements, or hereditaments.

6. Where by the said act of the 2 & 3 Vict. re-registrars of judgments, decrees, orders, or rules is required within such period of five years as is therein mentioned, in order to bind purchasers, mortgagees, and creditors, it shall be deemed sufficient to bind such purchasers, mortgagees, and creditors if such a memorandum or minute as was required in the first instance is again left with the senior Master of the Common Pleas within five years before the execution of the conveyance, settlement, mortgage, lease, or other deed or instrument vesting or transferring the legal or equitable right, title, estate, or interest in or to any such purchaser or mortgagee for valuable consideration, or as to creditors within five years before the right of such creditors accrued, as directed by the said last-mentioned act, although more than five years shall have expired by effluxion of time since the last previous registration before such last-mentioned memorandum or minute was left, and so toties quoties upon every re-registrars.

7. Where by the section numbered 22 of the said act of the 1 & 2 Vict. power is given to remove judgments, rules, or orders obtained in or made by certain inferior courts into the said superior courts, or into the Court of Common Pleas of Lancaster, as the case may be, no such judgment, rule, or order which has already been, or hereafter shall be, so removed shall bind any lands, tenements, or hereditaments as to purchasers, mortgagees, or creditors, unless and until after such removal it shall be registered, and if necessary re-registered, in like manner as, in order to bind such purchasers, mortgagees, or creditors, it must have been if originally entered up in one of the said superior courts, or in the said Court of Common Pleas of Lancaster, as the case may be; but from and after the passing of this act every such judgment, rule, or order so registered, and where necessary re-registered, shall be binding in like manner, but not further or otherwise, as other judgments, rules, or orders of the said superior courts, or of the said Court of Common Pleas of Lancaster respectively, and the proviso at the end of the said sect. 22 restricting the operation of the same is hereby repealed.

8. Nothing herein contained shall extend to revive or restore any judgment which shall be extinguished or barred, or to affect or prejudice any such judgment, or any decree, order, or rule, as between the parties thereto, or their representatives, or those deriving as volunteers under them.

9. For the purposes of any registration or re-registration to be made in pursuance of this act in either of the said counties palatine, all such acts and things as under the provisions of the said several acts of the reign of her Majesty ought to be done by or left with the senior master of the Court of Common Pleas at Westminster shall be done by or left with the prothonotary or deputy prothonotary of the Court of Common Pleas of the county palatine of Lancaster, or of the Court of Pleas of the county palatine of Durham, as the case may require, or such other officer (if any) of the same courts respectively as may for the time being have been appointed by the same courts respectively, for the purpose of entering the judgments thereof respectively, under the provisions of the said act of the 1 & 2 Vict.; and the said prothonotary, deputy prothonotary, or other officer as aforesaid, shall be entitled to the sum of 2s. 6d., and no more, for the duties to be performed on every registration, and the sum of 1s. only for re-registration; and all persons shall be at liberty to search all or any of the books kept in pursuance of any of the foregoing provisions of this act in each court for the sum of 1s.

10. And whereas by the section numbered 123 of the Bankrupt-law Consolidation Act, 1849, when any person admits (in manner therein mentioned) that he is indebted to a bankrupt, it is enacted, that every order of the Court of Bankruptcy for the payment by such person of the amount so admitted, and costs, (if any), shall have the effect of a judgment in the said superior courts, and may be enforced accordingly; and by the section numbered 249 of the same act it is enacted, that the said court may in all matters before it award costs, and that the like remedies may be had upon an order of the said court for costs as upon a rule of any of the said superior courts for costs, but the said act does not direct the registration of any such order as aforesaid: be it therefore enacted as follows:—No such order of the Court of Bankruptcy for payment of money or of costs as aforesaid shall affect any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, as to purchasers, mortgagees, or creditors, unless and until it shall be registered, and if necessary re-registered, in like manner as, in order to bind such purchasers, mortgagees, or creditors, it must have been if it had originally been a judgment or rule obtained or entered up in one of the said superior courts or in the said palatine courts respectively, any notice of any such order as any such purchaser, mortgagee, or creditor in anywise notwithstanding.

11. And whereas great delay and expense are occasioned upon purchases and mortgages of lands in consequence of judgments against mortgagees and Crown debts and liabilities to the Crown of mortgagees continuing to bind lands, although the mortgagees have been bonâ fide paid off, and the lands have been actually conveyed to purchasers, or to other mortgagees: for remedy whereof, be it enacted as follows:—Where any legal or equitable estate or interest, or any disposing power in or over any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, shall, under any conveyance or other instrument executed after the passing of this act, become vested in any person as a purchaser or mortgagee for valuable consideration, such lands, tenements, or hereditaments shall not be taken in execution under any writ or elegit, or other writ of execution, to be sued upon any judgment, or any decree, order, or rule against any mortgagee or mortgagees thereof, who shall have been paid off prior to or at the time of the execution of such conveyance, nor shall any such judgment, decree, order, or rule, or the money thereby secured, be a charge upon such lands, tenements, or hereditaments so vested in purchasers or mortgagees, nor shall such lands, tenements, or hereditaments so vested in purchasers or mortgagees be extended or taken in execution, or rendered liable under any writ of extent or writ of execution or other process issued by or on behalf of her Majesty, her heirs or successors, in respect of any judgment, statute, or recognisance obtained against or entered into by, or inquisition found against, or obligation or specialty made by, or acceptance of office by any mortgagee or mortgagees, whereby he or they hath or have become or shall become a debtor or accountant, or debtors or accountants to the Crown, where such mortgagee or mortgagees shall have been paid off prior to or at the time of the execution of such conveyance as aforesaid.

12. And whereas by reason of the repeal in the last session of Parliament of the act of the 53 Geo. 3, c. 141, requiring the enrolment of life annuities or rent-charges, purchasers are no longer enabled to ascertain by search what life annuities or rent-charges may have been granted by their vendors or others: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—Any annuity or rent-charge granted after the passing of this act, otherwise than by marriage settlement, for one or more life or lives, or for any term of years or greater estate determinable on one or more life or lives, shall not affect any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, as to purchasers, mortgagees, or creditors, unless and until a memorandum or minute containing the name, and the usual or last known place of abode, and the title, trade, or profession of the person whose estate is intended to be affected thereby, and the date of the deed, bond, instrument, or assurance whereby the annuity or rent-charge is granted, and the annual sum or sums to be paid, shall be left with the senior Master of the Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, who shall forthwith enter the particulars aforesaid in a book, in alphabetical order, by the name of the person whose estate is intended to be affected by the annuity or rent-charge, together with the year and the day of the month when every such memorandum or minute is so left with him, and he shall be entitled for every such entry to the sum of 2s. 6d., and all persons shall be at liberty to search the same book, together with the other books or registers in the office, on payment of the sum of 1s.

13. The searches of the several registers, by the said recited acts or by this act authorised to be made for the sum of 1s., may be made by the parties themselves, under proper regulations in the office, and the sum of 1s. only shall be payable on one search, although more names than one shall be searched for where such names relate to the same purchase, mortgage, or other transaction.

14. The provisions of this act shall not extend to require the registry of annuities or rent-charges given by will.

2. Every periodical publication hereinafter mentioned which shall be printed within the United Kingdom on paper stamped for denoting the rate of duty now imposed by law on newspapers shall be entitled to the like privileges of transmission and retransmission by the post between places in the United Kingdom, either postage free or otherwise, on the same terms and conditions, and under and subject to the like rules and regulations, as newspapers duly stamped are now entitled and subject to under any act or acts in force, but under and subject nevertheless to the terms and conditions in this act contained.

3. Every periodical publication, to be entitled to any such privilege as aforesaid, shall be printed and published at intervals not exceeding thirty-one days between any two consecutive parts or numbers of such publication, and shall be subject to the same limitations and restrictions with respect to the number of sheets or pieces of paper whereon the same shall be printed, and with respect to the superficies or dimensions of the letter-press thereof, as by any act or acts now in force are enacted or imposed with respect to newspapers, and supplements thereto; and every such periodical publication shall be entitled to such privilege only on the terms and conditions following; (that is to say), one of the sheets or pieces of paper on which the same shall be printed shall be stamped with an appropriated die, denoting the stamp duty imposed by law on a newspaper printed on the like number of sheets or pieces of paper, and of the like dimensions with respect to the superficies of the letter-press thereof; and on the top of every page of such publication shall be printed the title thereof, and the date of publishing the same; and such periodical publication at the time when the same shall be posted shall be folded in such manner that the whole of the stamp denoting the said duty shall be exposed to view, and be distinctly visible on the outside thereof; also such periodical publication shall not be printed on pasteboard or cardboard, or on two or more pieces or thicknesses of paper pasted together, nor shall any pasteboard, cardboard, or such pasted paper be transmitted by post with any such periodical publication, either as a back or cover thereto, or otherwise.

7. And whereas certain treaties and arrangements have been made and entered into, and other treaties and arrangements may hereafter be entered into, by and between her Majesty's Government and certain foreign and colonial governments, for regulating the transmission of British newspapers abroad; and it is expedient to make provision for enabling her Majesty's Postmaster-General to secure for such newspapers respectively the privileges and advantages of such treaties and arrangements: be it therefore enacted, that upon the Postmaster-General being satisfied that any printed publication is a newspaper, or entitled to the privileges of a newspaper, within the meaning of such treaties and arrangements as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the proprietor or printer of such newspaper or publication, if he shall think fit, to register the same at the General Post-office in London, in such form, and with such particulars relating to the same, and subject to the payment of such fees, not exceeding 5s. respectively, as well on registration as afterwards periodically for being continued on the register, as the Postmaster-General, with the consent of the Commissioners of the Treasury, shall from time to time direct or require in that behalf; and thereupon such newspaper or publication, being printed on paper duly stamped with an appropriated die under the provisions of this act, shall be entitled to all the privileges and advantages secured to newspapers by any such treaties and arrangements as aforesaid.

8. 12. The term "periodical publication" used in this act shall be construed to mean and include a newspaper as defined by the acts in force relating to the stamp duties on newspapers, and every printed literary work or paper printed and published periodically, or in parts or numbers, at intervals not exceeding thirty-one days between any two consecutive papers, parts, or numbers of such literary work or paper; and for all the purposes of this act the islands of Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, Sark, and the Isle of Man shall respectively be deemed to be part of the United Kingdom.

2. Provided nevertheless, that notwithstanding the repeal of the said several statutes, every friendly society now subsisting, which heretofore had been formed and established under the said acts or any of them, shall still be deemed to be and shall continue to be a subsisting society, as fully as if this act had not been made, unless and until such society shall be dissolved or united with some other society, as hereinafter mentioned.

3. Provided also, that the rules of every such subsisting society hitherto formed and established, which have been hitherto confirmed, registered, or certified under the said acts or any of them, shall be deemed valid and in force until the same shall be altered or rescinded as hereinafter mentioned; and before the money directed to be levied by such process as aforesaid, or which may be recovered or recoverable under such diligence, is paid over to the party issuing such process or using such diligence; and all such assets, lands, goods, chattels, property, estates, and effects shall be bound to the payment, discharge, and satisfaction of such claims.

24. If any officer, member, or other person, being or representing himself to be a member of such society, or the nominee, executor, administrator, or assignee of a member thereof, or any person whatsoever, by false representation or imposition, shall obtain possession of any monies, securities, books, papers, or other effects of such society, or having the same in his possession shall withhold or misapply the same, or shall wilfully apply any part of the same to purposes other than those expressed or directed in the rules of such society, or any part thereof, it shall be lawful in England for any justice of the peace acting in the county or borough in which the place of business of such society shall be situated, upon complaint made by any person on behalf of such society, to summon the person against whom such complaint is made to appear at a time and place to be named in such summons; and any two justices present at the time and place mentioned in such summons shall proceed to hear and determine the said complaint, in manner directed by the act passed in the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43; and in Scotland every such offence may be prosecuted by summary complaint at the instance of the procurator fiscal of the county, or of the society with his concurrence, before the sheriff; and if the said justices or sheriffs respectively shall determine the said complaint to be proved against such person, they shall adjudge and order him to deliver up all such monies, securities, books, papers, or other effects to the society, or to repay the amount of money applied improperly, and to pay, if they think fit, a further sum of money not exceeding 20*l.*, together with costs not exceeding 20*s.*; and in default of such delivery of effects, or repayment of such amount of money, or payment of such penalty and costs aforesaid, the said justices or sheriffs may order the said person so convicted to be imprisoned in the common gaol or house of correction, with or without hard labour, for any time not exceeding three months: provided that nothing herein contained shall prevent the said society, or in Scotland her Majesty's advocate, from proceeding by indictment against the said party; provided also, that no person shall be proceeded against by indictment if a conviction shall have been previously obtained for the same offence under the provisions of this act.

25. Before any friendly society shall be established under this act, the persons intending to establish the same shall agree upon and frame a set of rules for the regulation, government, and management of such society; and in such rules they may, amongst other things, make provision for appointing a general committee of management of such society, and delegating to such committee all or any of the powers given by this act to the members of friendly societies formed or established under or by virtue of the same; and such rules shall set forth,

1. The name of the society and place of meeting for the business of the society;
2. The whole of the objects for which the society is to be established, the purposes for which the funds thereof shall be applicable, and the conditions under which any member may become entitled to any benefit assured thereby, and the fines and forfeitures to be imposed on any member of such society;
3. The manner of making, altering, amending, and rescinding rules;
4. A provision for the appointment and removal of a general committee of management, of a trustee or trustees, treasurer, and other officers;
5. A provision for the investment of the funds, and for an annual or periodical audit of accounts;
6. The manner in which disputes between the society and any of its members, or any person claiming by or through any member, or under the rules, shall be settled:

And the rules of every such society shall provide that all monies received or paid on account of each and every particular fund or benefit assured to the members thereof, their husbands, wives, children, fathers, mothers, brothers or sisters, nephews or nieces, for which a separate table of contributions payable shall have been adopted, shall be entered in a separate account, distinct from the monies received and paid on account of any other benefit or fund, and also that a contribution shall be made to defray the necessary expenses of management, and a separate account shall be kept of such contributions and expenses.

26. Two printed or written copies of such rules, signed by three of the intended members and the secretary or other officer, shall be transmitted to the registrar aforesaid, and the said registrar shall advise with the secretary or other officer, if required, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the said rules are calculated to carry into effect the intentions and object of the persons who desire to form such society; and if the registrar shall find that such rules are in conformity with law and with the provisions of this act, he shall give a certificate in the form set forth in the second schedule to this act, and shall return one of the said copies to the said society, and shall keep the other in such manner as shall from time to time be directed by one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, and for which certificate no fee shall be payable to the said registrar; and all rules, when so certified as aforesaid, shall be binding on the several members of the said society: provided always, that it shall not be lawful for the said registrar to grant any such certificate to a society assuring to any member thereof a certain annuity or certain superannuation, deferred or immediate, unless the tables of contributions payable for such kind of assurance shall have been certified under the hand of the actuary to the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, or by an actuary of some life assurance company established in London, Edinburgh, or Dublin, who shall have exercised the profession of actuary for at least five years, and such certificate be transmitted to the registrar, together with the copies of the rules aforesaid.

27. After the rules of a friendly society shall have been so certified by the registrar as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for such society, by resolution at a meeting specially called for that purpose, to alter, amend, or rescind the same or any of them, or to make new rules; and it shall be lawful for any friendly society, formed and established under any of the acts hereby repealed, to alter, amend, or rescind the rules by which their society is governed, regulated, or managed, or to make new rules: provided always, that two copies of the proposed alterations or amendments, and of such new rules, signed by three members of such society and the secretary or other officer, shall be transmitted to the said registrar, to one of which shall be attached a declaration by the secretary or one of the officers of such society, that in making the same the rules of such society respecting the making, altering, amending, and rescinding rules, or the directions of the act under which such society was established, have been duly complied with; and if the said registrar shall find that such alterations, amendments, or new rules are in conformity with law, he shall give to the society a certificate in the form set forth in the schedule to this act, and return one of the copies to the society, and shall keep the other, with the rules of such society, in his custody, and for which certificate no fee shall be payable to the said registrar, and as against such member or person such certificate shall be conclusive of the validity thereof; and all rules, alterations, and amendments, when so certified as aforesaid, shall be binding on the several members of the said society, and all persons claiming on account of a member or under the said rules; but unless and until the same shall be so certified as aforesaid, such rules, alterations, and amendments shall have no force or validity whatsoever.

28. Whenever any friendly society established under this act, or under any of the acts hereby repealed, shall change its place of business, notice of such change, under the hands of two of the trustees, or three members and secretary or other officer, shall, within fourteen days thereafter, be sent to the said registrar.

29. If any person shall give to any member of a friendly society established under this act, or under any of the said repealed acts, or to any person intending or applying to become a member of such society, a copy of any rules, or of any alterations or amendments of the same, other than those respectively which have been inrolled with any clerk of the peace or certified by the registrar, with a copy of his certificate appended thereto, under colour that the same are binding upon the members of such society, or shall make any alterations in or addition to any of the rules or tables of such society after they shall have been respectively inrolled or certified by the registrar, and shall circulate the same, purporting that they have been duly inrolled or certified under this or any of the said repealed acts, when they have not been so duly inrolled or cer-

30. All rules and tables of any society established under this act, or any of the said repealed acts, and all alterations and amendments thereof, and all copies thereof or extracts therefrom, and all writings and documents relating to a friendly society, and purporting to be signed by the registrar, shall, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, be received in all courts of law and equity, and elsewhere, without proof of the signature thereto.

31. When, on the death of any member of a society established under this act or any of the said repealed acts, a sum of money not exceeding 50*l.* shall become payable, the same shall be paid by the trustees of such society to the person directed by the rules thereof, or nominated by the deceased in writing deposited with the secretary, (such person being the husband, wife, father, mother, child, brother or sister, nephew or niece of such member); and in case there shall be no such direction or nomination, or the person so nominated shall have died before the deceased member, or in case the member shall have revoked such nomination, then such sum shall be paid to the person who shall appear to the said trustees to be entitled, under the Statute of Distributions, to receive the same, without taking out letters of administration in England or Ireland, and without confirmation in Scotland: provided, that wherever the trustee or trustees of any such society, after the decease of any member thereof, shall have paid and divided any such sum of money to or amongst any person or persons who shall at the time of such payment appear to such trustee or trustees to be entitled to the effects of any deceased member who has died intestate, without having appointed any nominee as aforesaid, the payment of any such sum shall be valid and effectual with respect to any demand from any other person or persons as next of kin of such deceased member, or as the lawful representative or representatives of such member, against the funds of such society or against the trustees thereof; but nevertheless such next of kin or representative shall have his or her lawful remedy for such money so paid as aforesaid against the person or persons who shall have received the same.

32. The trustee or trustees of every friendly society established under this act or any of the said repealed acts shall from time to time, with the consent of the committee of management of such society; or of a majority of the members of such society present at a general or special meeting thereof, or in accordance with the rules of such society, invest the funds of such society, or any part thereof, to any amount, in any savings bank, or in the public funds, or with the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, as hereinafter mentioned, or in such other security as the rule of such society may direct, not being the purchase of house or land, (save and except the purchase of buildings wherein to hold the meetings or transact the business of such society, as hereinbefore mentioned), and not being the purchase of shares in any joint-stock company or other company with or without charter of incorporation, and not being personal security, except in the case of a member of one full year's standing at least, and in respect of a sum not exceeding one-half the amount of his assurance on life, such member providing the written security of himself and two satisfactory sureties for repayment, and in case of such member's death before repayment, the amount of such advance, with interest, may be deducted from the sum so assured, without prejudice in the meantime to the operation of such security.

33. Every friendly society established under this act which does not assure the payment in any event of a sum exceeding 200*l.*, or an annuity exceeding 30*l.* per annum, may pay any sum of money not less than 50*l.* into the Bank of England or Ireland, to the account of the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, upon the declaration of the trustee or of the trustees, or any two or more of them, that such monies belong exclusively to the said society; and the cashier of the Bank of England is hereby required to receive all such monies, and to place the same to the account raised in the name of the said commissioners in the book of the Bank, named "The Fund for Friendly Societies;" and if such declaration shall not be true, then and in every such case the sum of money so paid in on such declaration shall be forfeited to the said commissioners, and shall be applied by them in the manner directed by any act or acts for the time being in force relating to savings banks with respect to the account of such banks; and the regulation of receipts, certificates, or orders concerning savings banks shall be deemed applicable to monies paid in as aforesaid under the authority of this act, as if the same had been herein repeated; and every such society, on paying money directly into the Bank as aforesaid, shall be entitled to receive receipts bearing interest at the rate of 2*d.* per centum per diem: provided, that every society which shall deposit any part of its funds in any savings bank, or with the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, shall furnish to the said commissioners from time to time such accounts as they may require in reference to the funds so deposited.

34. Every society already established under any of the acts hereby repealed, which shall have heretofore invested any part of its funds with the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, shall be entitled to pay into the Bank of England or Ireland, in sums of not less than 50*l.*, money received from members on account of assurances made before the passing of this act, and to receive receipts for the same bearing interest at such rate or rates as such society has hitherto been entitled to receive on account of such assurances; that is to say, for money invested with the commissioners by any society legally established before the 28th July, 1828, on account of any assurance made before the 15th August, 1850, 3*d.* per centum per diem; and on account of any assurance effected after that day, 2*d.* per centum per diem; and for money invested with the commissioners by any society established between the 28th July, 1828, and the 15th August, 1850, on account of assurances made before the 15th August, 1850, 2½*d.* per centum per diem; and on account of any assurance effected after that day, 2*d.* per centum per diem; and for money invested with the commissioners by any society established since the 15th July, 1850, the sum of 2*d.* per centum per diem: provided, that the trustees of every society which shall have invested or shall invest any part of its funds with the said commissioners shall furnish from time to time such accounts and returns as the said commissioners shall require, and shall satisfy the said commissioners that they are legally entitled to receive such interest as aforesaid, and to make such further investment.

35. Where any friendly society shall withdraw money invested by them with the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, such society shall not be entitled to make any further deposit with the said commissioners without the consent of the said commissioners, or of the comptroller-general or assistant comptroller under them.

36. Whenever it shall happen that any person, being or having been a trustee of any society established under this act, or any act hereby repealed, and whether he shall have been appointed before or after the legal establishment thereof, in whose name any part of the several stocks, annuities, and funds belonging to any such society, transferable at the Bank of England or Ireland, or in the books of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England or Ireland, or in any savings bank, is or shall be standing, shall be out of England or Ireland or Scotland respectively, or shall have been removed from his office of trustee, or shall be a bankrupt, insolvent, or lunatic, or it shall be unknown whether such trustee is living or dead, it shall be lawful for the registrar, after receiving an application in writing from the secretary of the society and three members thereof, and upon proof satisfactory to such registrar, to direct the Accountant-General or other proper officer for the time being of the said Governor and Company of the Bank of England or Ireland, or of any savings bank, to transfer in the books of the said company or of the said savings bank such stocks, annuities, or funds, standing as aforesaid, into the name of the trustee who shall be newly appointed, and to pay to him from time to time the dividends thereof; and if one of two or more such trustees shall die, or be removed from his office of trustee, or become bankrupt or insolvent, it shall be lawful for the registrar, on the like application, to direct that the other or others of the trustees shall transfer such stock, annuities, or funds into the name of such person as may have been appointed in his stead, jointly with the continuing trustee or trustees.

37. No copy of rules, nor power, warrant, or letter of attorney granted by any person as trustee of any society established under this act, or any of the acts hereby repealed, for the transfer of any share in the public funds standing in the name of such trustee, nor any order or receipt for money contributed to or received from the funds of any such society by any person liable or entitled to pay or receive the same by virtue of the rules thereof or of this act, nor any bond to be given to or on account of any such society, or by the treasurer or any officer thereof, nor any draft or order, nor any form of policy, nor any appointment of any agent, nor any certificate or other instrument for the revocation of any such appointment, nor any other document whatever required or authorised by or in pursuance of this act or the rules of any society, shall be liable to stamp duty: provided, that no exemption from any of the duties granted by any act or acts relating to stamp duties shall be deemed to extend to any society which shall assure the payment of money exceeding 200*l.*, or which shall assure the payment of any money on the death of a member to any person except the executors, administrators, or assigns of such member, or the husband, wife, father, mother, child, brother, sister, nephew, or niece of such member.

38. If any person shall become a member of more than one society, whereby certain benefits shall accrue on account of the same kind of assurance from more than one society, it shall not be lawful for him, or for any person entitled through or under him, or by reason of his membership, or for any number of such persons in the aggregate, to receive more than 200*l.*, or, in the case of annuities, 30*l.* a year, from such societies collectively; and in any case where a person shall so as aforesaid be a member of more than one society, and he, or any other person or persons, shall be entitled to any benefit in gross or by way of annuity from any such society, he, or (as the circumstances may require) every such other person, shall, before he shall receive any such benefit from any of such societies, make and sign a declaration that the total value of all benefits accruing or which shall have accrued in respect of any one kind of assurance does not exceed the value of 200*l.*, or, in the case of annuities, 30*l.* a year; and it shall be lawful for any society to require any member or any other person who shall be entitled to any such benefit, before he shall receive the same, to make and sign a declaration to the same effect, or that such member was not when the benefit accrued a member of any other association; and if any person shall knowingly make any false or fraudulent declaration in any such case he shall be guilty of misdemeanour.

39. The trustees of any friendly society may, out of the funds thereof, subscribe to any hospital, infirmary, charitable or other provident institution, such annual or other sum as may be agreed upon by the committee of management, or by a majority of the members at a meeting called for that purpose, in consideration of any member of such society, his wife, child, or other person nominated, being eligible to receive the benefits of such hospital or other institution, according to the rules thereof.

40. Every dispute between any member or members of any society established under this act or any of the acts hereby repealed, or any person claiming through or under a member, or under the rules of such society, and the trustee, treasurer, or other officer, or the committee thereof, shall be decided in manner directed by the rules of such society, and the decision so made shall be binding and conclusive on all parties, without appeal: provided, that where the rules of any society established under any of the acts hereby repealed shall have directed disputes to be referred to justices, such disputes shall, from and after the 1st August, 1855, be referred to and decided by the county court, as hereinafter mentioned.

41. In all friendly societies established under this act or any of the said repealed acts, all applications for the removal of any trustee, or for any other relief, order, or direction, or for the settlement of disputes that may arise or may have arisen in any society the rules of which do not prescribe any other mode of settling such disputes, or to enforce the decision of any arbitrators, or to hear or determine any dispute if no arbitrator shall have been appointed, or if no decision shall be made by the said arbitrators within forty days after application has been made by the member or person claiming through or under a member, or under the rules of the society, shall be made to the county court of the district within which the usual or principal place of business of the society shall be situate; and such court shall, upon the application of any person interested in the matter, entertain such application, and give such relief, and make such orders and directions in relation to the matter of such application, as hereinafter mentioned, or as may now be given or made by the Court of Chancery in respect either of its ordinary or its special or statutory jurisdiction; and the decision of such county court upon and in relation to such application as aforesaid shall not be subject to any appeal: provided always, that in Scotland the sheriff within his county, and in Ireland the assistant barrister within his dis-strict, shall have the same jurisdiction as is hereby given to the judge of a county court.

42. In all cases where the order of such county court shall be for the payment of money, the same may be enforced in the same manner as the ordinary judgments of such court are enforced; but where the order of the said court shall be for the doing of some act, not being for the payment of money, it shall be lawful for the judge of such county court in his said order to order the party to do such act, or that in default of his doing it he shall pay a certain sum of money; and in case he refuse or neglect to do the act required, upon demand in that behalf, the sum of money or penalty in the said order may then be recovered in the same manner as a judgment for debt or damages in such court; and it shall not be lawful to remove the same by certiorari or other writ or process to any superior court of record.

43. Provided, however, that the Lord Chancellor may make such orders for regulating the proceedings by and before the judges of county courts under this act as he may think fit; and in Scotland the Court of Session shall have the like power by act of sederunt as regards proceedings before sheriffs under this act; and, subject to such orders and acts of sederunt respectively, such judges and sheriffs may regulate the proceedings before them respectively so as to render them as summary and inexpensive as conveniently may be.

44. In the case of any friendly society established for any of the purposes mentioned in sect. 9 of this act, or for any purpose which is not illegal, having written or printed rules, whose rules have not been certified by the registrar, provided a copy of such rules shall have been deposited with the registrar, every dispute between any member or members of such society, and the trustees, treasurer, or other officer, or the committee of such society, shall be decided in manner hereinbefore provided with respect to disputes, and the decision thereof, in the case of societies to be established under this act, and the sections in this act provided for such decision, and also the section in this act which enacts a punishment in case of fraud or imposition by an officer, member, or person, shall be applicable to such uncertified societies: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to confer on any such society whose rules shall not have been certified by the registrar, or any of the members or officers of such society, any of the powers, exemptions, or facilities of this act, save and except as in and by this section is expressly provided.

45. The trustees of friendly societies established under this act or under any of the repealed acts, or the officer thereof appointed to prepare returns, shall once in every year, in the months of January, February, or March, transmit to the registrar a general statement of the funds and effects of such society during the past twelve months, or a copy of the last annual report of such society, and shall also within three months after the expiration of the month of December, 1855, and so again within three months after the expiration of every five years succeeding, transmit to the said registrar a return of the rate or amount of sickness and mortality experienced by such society within the preceding five years, in such form as shall be prepared by the said registrar, and an abstract of the same shall be laid before Parliament; and the registrar shall also lay before Parliament every year a report of his proceedings in his office of registrar, and of the principal matters transacted by friendly societies which have come under his cognisance during the past year.

46. And whereas under the provisions of the acts hereby repealed, or some of them, certain associations or societies have been formed in England and Ireland for the provident and charitable purpose of securing annual payments to the nominees of the members thereof, contingent upon the death of such members, and have invested their funds in the manner provided by such acts, and doubts may arise whether such associations or societies will be entitled to the exemptions and privileges by this act conferred in the event of such annual payments amounting in the aggregate to more than 30*l.*; and it is expedient to remove such doubts, and to give protection to such associations or societies, and to the funds thereof: be it therefore enacted, that notwithstanding anything in this act contained to the contrary, all such associations or societies as were founded and subsisting under the provisions of the said acts previously to the 15th August, 1850, shall enjoy the exemptions and privileges by this act conferred on societies to be established under the provisions of this act as fully as if they had been registered and certified under this act, and notwithstanding that the contingent annual payments to which the nominees of the present or future members of such associations or societies may become entitled shall exceed in the aggregate the sum of 30*l.*

47. In any case where the rules of any society already enrolled or certified have provided, that a member shall be deprived of any benefit by reason of his enrolment or service in the militia, it shall be lawful for the trustees of such society to require of any member a contribution exceeding the rate of contribution hitherto payable by such member, to an amount not exceeding one-tenth of such rate, during the time such member shall be serving out of the United Kingdom, or to suspend all claim of such member to any benefits of such society, and all claim of the society to any contributions payable by such member, during the time he may be serving in the militia out of the United Kingdom, provided that such suspension shall cease so soon as the said member shall return to the United Kingdom, and he shall thereupon be replaced on the same footing as before he went abroad with the regiment to which he belongs.

48. All the provisions of this act shall apply to all societies constituted under the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1852, in the same manner as the laws in force relating to friendly societies at the date of the passing of the said Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1852, are by the said last-mentioned act directed to apply to societies constituted thereunder; and the limitation hereinbefore contained of the amount of annuities and sums payable on the death of any person, or on any other contingency, in the case of societies established under this act, shall apply to all societies constituted under the said Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1852.

49. The word "society" shall extend to and include every branch of a society, by whatever name it may be designated.

50. This act shall extend to Great Britain and Ireland, and the Channel Isles, and the Isle of Man.

51. This act shall commence and take effect from the 1st August, 1855.

Whereas bond fide holders of dishonoured bills of exchange and promissory notes are often unjustly delayed and put to unnecessary expense in recovering the amount thereof by reason of frivolous or fictitious defences to actions thereon, and it is expedient that greater facilities than now exist should be given for the recovery of money due on such bills and notes: be it enacted &c. as follows:—

Sec. 1. From and after the 24th October, 1855, all actions upon bills of exchange or promissory notes commenced within six months after the same shall have become due and payable may be by writ of summons in the special form contained in Schedule (A.) to this act annexed, and indorsed as therein mentioned; and it shall be lawful for the plaintiff, on filing an affidavit of personal service of such writ within the jurisdiction of the court, or an order for leave to proceed, as provided by the Common-law Procedure Act, 1852, and a copy of the writ of summons and the indorsements thereon, in case the defendant shall not have obtained leave to appear and have appeared to such writ according to the exigency thereof, at once to sign final judgment in the form contained in Schedule (B.) to this act annexed, (on which judgment no proceeding in error shall lie), for any sum not exceeding the sum indorsed on the writ, together with interest, at the rate specified, (if any), to the date of the judgment, and a sum for costs to be fixed by the Masters of the superior courts, or any three of them, subject to the approval of the judges thereof, or any eight of them, (of whom the Lord Chief Justices and the Lord Chief Baron shall be three), unless the plaintiff claim more than such fixed sum, in which case the costs shall be taxed in the ordinary way, and the plaintiff may upon such judgment issue execution forthwith.

2. A judge of any of the said courts shall, upon application within the period of twelve days from such service, give leave to appear to such writ and to defend the action, on the defendant paying into court the sum indorsed on the writ, or upon affidavits satisfactory to the judge, which disclose a legal or equitable defence, or such facts as would make it incumbent on the holder to prove consideration, or such other facts as the judge may deem sufficient to support the application, and on such terms as to security or otherwise as to the judge may seem fit.

3. After judgment the court or a judge may, under special circumstances, set aside the judgment, and, if necessary, stay or set aside execution, and may give leave to appear to the writ and to defend the action, if it shall appear to be reasonable to the court or judge so to do, and on such terms as to the court or judge may seem just.

4. In any proceedings under this act it shall be competent to the court or a judge to order the bill or note sought to be proceeded upon to be forthwith deposited with an officer of the court, and further to order that all proceedings shall be stayed until the plaintiff shall have given security for the costs thereof.

5. The holder of every dishonoured bill of exchange or promissory note shall have the same remedies for the recovery of the expenses incurred in noting the same for non-acceptance or non-payment, or otherwise, by reason of such dishonour, as he has under this act for the recovery of the amount of such bill or note.

6. The holder of any bill of exchange or promissory note may, if he think fit, issue one writ of summons, according to this act, against all or any number of the parties to such bill or note, and such writ of summons shall be the commencement of an action or actions against the parties therein named respectively, and all subsequent proceedings against such respective parties shall be in like manner, so far as may be, as if separate writs of summons had been issued.

7. The provisions of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1852, and the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, and all rules made under or by virtue of either of the said acts, shall, so far as the same are or may be made applicable, extend and apply to all proceedings to be had or taken under this act.

8. The provisions of this act shall apply, as near as may be, to the Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster and the Court of Pleas at Durham, and the judges of such courts, being judges of one of the superior courts of common law at Westminster, shall have power to frame all rules and process necessary thereto.

9. It shall be lawful for her Majesty from time to time, by an Order in Council, to direct that all or any part of the provisions of this act shall apply to all or any court or courts of record in England and Wales, and within one month after such order shall have been made and published in the London Gazette such provisions shall extend and apply in manner directed by such order, and any such order may be in like manner from time to time altered and annulled; and in and by any such order her Majesty may direct by whom any powers or duties incident to the provisions applied under this act shall and may be exercised with respect to matters in such court or courts, and may make any orders or regulations which may be deemed requisite for carrying into operation in such court or courts the provisions so applied.

of adequate space in others, great difficulty is frequently found in carrying into execution the above provisions, and it is expedient that other provisions should be made: be it therefore enacted &c.

Sect. 1. That where the guardians of any union or parish, or any of their officers duly authorised in that behalf, or the overseers of any parish not under a board of guardians, shall undertake the burial of any poor person, or shall contribute money or other aid towards the same, and the burial cannot take place in the parish where, according to the provisions of the said act, the same would have been required to take place, by reason of the public burial ground of such parish having been closed, and no other having been provided, or where, in consequence of the crowded state of such burial ground, the guardians or overseers respectively are of opinion that the burial of such dead body therein would be improper, it shall be lawful to bury such body in a public burial ground (some part of which has been consecrated) of or in some other parish as near as conveniently may be to the parish wherein the burial would have been required to take place according to the provisions of the said act: provided, that in all cases of burial under the direction of the guardians or their officers, or of the overseers, as aforesaid, the fee or fees payable by the custom of the place where the burial may be, or under the provisions of any act of Parliament, shall be paid by the said guardians or overseers for the burial of each such body to the person or persons who by such custom or under such act of Parliament shall be entitled to receive such fee or fees.

2. The guardians of any union or parish, or the overseers of any parish not under a board of guardians, may from time to time enter into agreements with the proprietors of any cemetery established under the authority of Parliament, or with any burial board duly constituted under the statutes in that behalf, for the burial of the dead bodies of any poor persons which such guardians or overseers may undertake to bury, or towards the burial whereof they may render assistance; and thereupon the burial of any such body, under the directions of the said guardians or their officers, or of such overseers, or with their aid respectively, in such cemetery, or in the burial ground of such burial board, (unless the deceased person, or the husband or wife or next of kin of such deceased person, have otherwise expressly desired), shall be lawful: provided, however, that no such agreement shall be valid unless made in such form and with such stipulations as the Poor-law Board shall approve.

3. The words contained in this act shall be construed in like manner as in the act of the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, and in the several acts incorporated therewith.

4. Any place of meeting for religious worship heretofore certified and registered or recorded in manner required by law, and which continues to be used for religious worship, save any such place of meeting certified to the said registrar-general under the said act of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 36, may, at any time after the passing of this act, be certified in writing to such registrar-general through the superintendent registrar of the district in which such place may be situate, and shall be recorded by such registrar-general in manner hereinbefore mentioned concerning places of meeting not heretofore certified and registered or recorded.

11. The registrar-general, on payment to him of a fee of 2s. 6d., shall, with respect to any place certified to him as a place of meeting for religious worship, the record whereof remains uncancelled, give to any person demanding the same a certificate, sealed or stamped with the seal of the General Register Office, that at the time or respective times in such certificate in that behalf stated the place therein described was duly certified and duly recorded as required by this act, and that at the date of such sealed or stamped certificate the record of such certification remained uncancelled; and every such sealed or stamped certificate, if tendered in evidence upon any trial or other judicial proceeding in any civil or criminal court, shall be received as evidence of the said several facts therein mentioned, without any further or other proof of the same.

3. In case default be made for the space of fourteen days in payment of any sum of money which may have become payable by such parent or step-parent under such order, such sum of money shall in every such case be levied upon the goods and chattels of the defendant by distress and sale thereof; and if it shall appear to the said justices, on confession of defendants or otherwise, or if it shall be returned to the warrant of distress in any such case, that no sufficient goods of the party against whom such warrant shall have been issued can be found, it shall be lawful for the justice to whom such return is made, or for any other justice of the peace for the same county, riding, division, liberty, city, borough, or place, by his warrant as aforesaid, to commit the defendant to the house of correction or common gaol for any term not exceeding ten days, unless the sum to be paid, and all costs and charges of the distress, and of the commitment and conveying of the defendant to prison, (the amount thereof being ascertained and stated in such commitment), shall be sooner paid.

4. In Scotland an action for payment of sums for the support and maintenance of a juvenile offender under the said act shall and may be raised before the sheriff or any two justices of the peace within the county in which sentence was passed on the offender, or in which the defender in such action may happen to reside; and such action shall and may be brought by the procurator fiscal of the sheriff court of such county, and by no one else; and it shall be lawful for the sheriff or justices before whom such action is brought to inquire into the circumstances of the party sued, and to decree for payment of such weekly sum, not exceeding 5s. per week during the period of detention of such offender, as he or they shall think fit, or, in his or their discretion, to dismiss the action; and such decree for payment of a weekly sum shall be held to be and have all the effect of a decree in each week for payment of the sum ordered to be paid for such week; and the sums recovered shall be accounted for and paid as the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury may direct.

cessful, costs to be recovered as between subject and subject.

Whereas in divers proceedings instituted by or on behalf of the Crown against the Queen's subjects in respect of matters relating to the revenue no costs are recovered by the Crown except in certain cases, and no costs are paid by the Crown to the subject: and whereas it is expedient to assimilate the law as to the recovery of costs in such proceedings by or on behalf of the Crown to that in force as to proceedings between subject and subject: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. In all informations, actions, suits, and other legal proceedings to be hereafter instituted before any court or tribunal whatever in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, by or on behalf of the Crown, against any corporation or person or persons, in respect of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or of any goods or chattels, belonging or accruing to the Crown, the proceeds whereof, or the rents or profits of which said lands, tenements, or hereditaments, by any act now in force or hereafter to be passed, are to be carried to the Consolidated Fund of Great Britain and Ireland, or in respect of any sum or sums of money due and owing to her Majesty by virtue of any vote of Parliament for the service of the Crown, or of any act of Parliament relating to the public revenue, her Majesty's Attorney-General, or in Scotland the Lord Advocate, shall be entitled to recover costs for and on behalf of her Majesty, where judgment shall be given for the Crown, in the same manner, and under the same rules, regulations, and provisions as are or may be in force touching the payment or receipt of costs in proceedings between subject and subject, and such costs shall be paid into the Exchequer, and shall become part of the Consolidated Fund.

2. If in any such information, action, suit, or other proceeding judgment shall be given against the Crown, the defendant or defendants shall be entitled to recover costs, in like manner, and subject to the same rules and provisions, as though such proceeding had been had between subject and subject; and it shall be lawful for the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury and they are hereby required to pay such costs out of any monies which may be hereafter voted by Parliament for that purpose.

3. And whereas the procedure and practice in informations, suits, and other proceedings instituted by or on behalf of the Crown in her Majesty's Court of Exchequer is dilatory, and requires amendment, and it is desirable that the same should be assimilated as near as may be to the course of practice and procedure now in force in actions and suits between subject and subject: be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the Barons of her Majesty's Court of Exchequer in England, or any three of them, and also for the Barons of her Majesty's Court of Exchequer in Ireland, or any three of them, in their respective courts, to make all such general rules and orders for the regulation of the pleading and practice in such informations, suits, and other proceedings, and to frame such writs and forms of proceedings, as to them may seem expedient for the purpose aforesaid; and all such rules, orders, or regulations shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament, if Parliament be then sitting, immediately upon the making of the same, or if Parliament be not sitting, then within five days after the next meeting thereof; and no such rule, order, or regulation shall have effect until three months after the same shall have been so laid before both Houses of Parliament; and any rule, order, or regulation so made shall, from and after such time aforesaid, be binding and obligatory on the said court, and on all courts of error into which any judgment of the said court shall be carried by any writ of error, and be of the like force and effect as if the provisions contained therein had been expressly enacted by Parliament: provided always, that it shall be lawful for the Queen's most excellent Majesty by any proclamation inserted in the London Gazette, or for either of the Houses of Parliament by any resolution passed at any time within three months next after such rules, orders, and regulations shall have been laid before Parliament, to suspend the whole or any part of such rules, orders, or regulations, and in such case the whole, or such part thereof as shall be so suspended, shall not be binding and obligatory on the said courts, or on any other court of common law or court of error.

Whereas an act of the session of Parliament holden in the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 100, was passed "for inspection of coal mines in Great Britain;" and whereas, with a view to the safety of the persons employed in such mines, it is expedient that further provision be made for the inspection and regulation thereof: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. The said act of the 13 & 14 Vict. [c. 100], shall be repealed: provided always, that the inspectors of coal mines appointed under such act shall continue to be such inspectors under this act, subject nevertheless to removal by one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State: provided also, that all penalties incurred under the said act before the repeal thereof may be proceeded for and applied as if this act had not been passed.

2. It shall be lawful for one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State from time to time to appoint any fit person or persons to be an inspector or inspectors of coal mines, and from time to time to remove any such inspector or inspectors; and notice of the appointment of every such inspector shall be published in the London Gazette.

3. No person who shall act or practise as a land agent, or as a manager, viewer, or agent, or mining engineer, or valuer of mines, or arbitrator in any matters of dispute arising between owners of mines, or be otherwise employed in any coal mine or colliery, shall act as an inspector of coal mines under this act.

4. The following rules (hereinafter referred to as the general rules) shall be observed in every coal mine and colliery by the owner and agent thereof:—

- (1). An adequate amount of ventilation shall be constantly produced at all collieries to dilute and render harmless noxious gases, to such an extent as that the working places of the pits and levels of such collieries shall under ordinary circumstances be in a fit state for working:
- (2). Every shaft or pit which is out of use, or used only as an air pit, shall be securely fenced:
- (3). Every working and pumping pit or shaft shall be properly fenced when not at work:
- (4). Every working and pumping pit or shaft, where the natural strata under ordinary circumstances are not safe, shall be securely cased or lined:
- (5). Every working pit or shaft shall be provided with some proper means of signalling from the bottom of the shaft to the surface, and from the surface to the bottom of the shaft.
- (6). A proper indicator to shew the position of the load in the pit or shaft, and also an adequate break, shall be attached to every machine worked by steam or water power used for lowering or raising persons:
- (7). Every steam boiler shall be provided with a proper steam gauge, water gauge, and safety valve.

5. In addition to the general rules there shall be established and observed in every coal mine or colliery such other rules (hereinafter referred to as special rules) for the conduct and guidance of the persons acting in the management of such coal mine or colliery, and of all persons employed in or about the same, as under the particular state and circumstances of such coal mine or colliery may appear best calculated to prevent dangerous accidents; and such special rules for each coal mine or colliery shall be framed by the owner thereof, and forthwith transmitted to one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State; and such rules, if not objected to by such Secretary of State within forty days from the day upon which they are received by him, shall be established; and in case such Secretary of State shall be of opinion that such rules, or any of them, do not sufficiently provide for the safety of the person or persons employed in or about such coal mine or colliery, it shall be lawful for such Secretary of State, within the forty days aforesaid, to propose any alterations in or additions to such special rules; and in case such owner shall not, within twenty days from the day on which such alterations or additions are proposed to him, object to the same, the special rules shall be established with such alterations and additions; and in case such owner shall, within the said twenty days, object to such alterations or additions, or any of them, it shall be lawful for such owner, within seven days after he shall have so objected, to nominate three or more practical mining engineers or other competent persons of experience in the district within which such coal mine or colliery is situate, and who shall not be interested in or employed in the management of such coal mine or colliery, of whom such Secretary of State may appoint one or more, to determine the matter in difference, and to decide what special rules shall be established in such coal mine or colliery; and if such owner shall not within such seven days nominate such mining engineers as aforesaid, or if such Secretary of State shall not within one month from the time of such nomination appoint one or more of the persons so nominated by the owner as aforesaid, then and in such case two such mining engineers or other competent persons as aforesaid shall be appointed, one of whom shall be named by the owner of such coal mine or colliery, and one by the Secretary of State; and the said persons so appointed shall, before they proceed to determine the matters in difference, and to decide what special rules shall be established in such coal mine or colliery, appoint a third person, being such mining engineer or such other competent person as aforesaid, to be their umpire in case of difference of opinion between them; and the determination of such persons and the said umpire, or of any two of them, shall be final, and the special rules shall be established accordingly: provided, that after such rules are established it shall be lawful for the owner of any coal mine or colliery (or for the Secretary of State) to propose from time to time any amendments of such rules, which amendments, if not objected to by the Secretary of State within the time aforesaid, or owners, as the case may be, shall be established; and in case of objection being made to any of them, and of a difference arising out of such objection, the same proceedings shall be had respecting them as hereinbefore provided in reference to the special rules when originally submitted to such Secretary of State, and objected to: provided also, that the amount of payment to be made to all such persons, and to such umpire so nominated or appointed as aforesaid, for their services, shall be fixed by such Secretary of State, and paid in equal moieties by such owner and the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, who are hereby authorised to make such payment accordingly.

6. For the purpose of making known the general rules and special rules to all persons employed in or about each coal mine or colliery, the owner thereof shall cause the general rules and the special rules for such coal mine or colliery to be painted on a board or printed upon paper to be pasted thereon, and shall cause such board to be hung up or affixed on some conspicuous part of the principal office or place of business of the coal mine or colliery; and the general rules and special rules so painted or printed and hung up shall be renewed and restored with all reasonable dispatch as often as the same, or any part thereof, may be defaced, obliterated, or destroyed; and a printed copy of such general and special rules shall be supplied to all persons employed in and about the same.

7. It shall be lawful for any inspector to enter, inspect, and examine any coal mine or colliery, and the works and machinery belonging thereto, at all reasonable times and seasons, by day or night, but so as not to impede or obstruct the working of the said coal mine or colliery, and to make inquiry into and touching the state and condition of such coal mine or colliery, works, and machinery, and the ventilation of such mine or colliery, and the mode of lighting or using lights in the same, and into all matters and things connected with or relating to the safety of the persons employed in or about the same, and especially to make inquiry whether the provisions of this act are complied with in relation to such coal mine or colliery; and the owner or agent of such coal mine or colliery is hereby required to furnish the means necessary for such entry, inspection, examination, and inquiry; and if such inspector find any of the general rules or any of the special rules established for such coal mine or colliery to be neglected or wilfully violated, such inspector shall forthwith give notice in writing thereof to the owner or agent of such coal mine or colliery; and if such inspector find any part of such coal mine or colliery, works or machinery, or any aircourses, airdoors, waterways, drains, pits, levels, shafts, or other matter or thing in or connected with such coal mine or colliery, or the mode of lighting or using lights in the same, to be otherwise dangerous or defective, so as in his opinion to threaten or tend to the bodily injury of any person employed in or about such coal mine or colliery, such inspector shall thereupon, by notice in writing, summon before him at the colliery office the manager or principal colliery viewer or agent having charge of the said coal mine or colliery, in order to his being heard upon the matter giving rise to such finding as aforesaid; and if such manager or principal colliery viewer or agent do not attend after reasonable notice, or having attended fail to satisfy such inspector, then such inspector shall serve notice in writing of the particular grounds on which he is of opinion that the said coal mine or colliery, or any part thereof, or any other of the particulars above mentioned, is dangerous or defective, on the owner or agent thereof, and shall also report the same to one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State; and in case of any difference arising thereupon the same shall be determined in the manner hereinbefore provided with respect to proposed alterations or additions to the special rules, and a copy of such notice, in case of no such difference as aforesaid, or of the determination in case of such difference, arising, shall, if the said danger or defect be not forthwith removed or remedied, and if the Secretary of State shall so direct, be hung up or affixed on some conspicuous part of the principal office or place of business of the coal mine or colliery, and a copy supplied to every workman to whom such notice or determination shall apply, such copy so to be hung up or affixed as aforesaid to be removed on the certificate of the inspector of the district, or of the persons by whom such determination shall have been made, that such danger or defect has been removed or remedied: provided always, that so long as any copy of such notice or determination, purporting that the coal mine or colliery, or any part thereof, or any other of the particulars above mentioned, is dangerous or defective, shall remain so hung up or affixed, and the danger or defect notified therein shall not be removed or remedied, it shall be lawful for any person employed in or about such coal mine or colliery to discontinue his service in any part of such coal mine or colliery to which part the said notice or determination shall apply, without being therefore liable to be proceeded against under the act passed in the 4 Geo. 4, c. 34, as for absence from his service, or misconduct in the execution thereof: provided also, that unless the owner or agent on whom the notice is served as aforesaid shall within seven days of such service signify to the said inspector his objections to the same, and at the same time nominate three competent persons, as hereinbefore provided in the 5th section, with a view to the determination of such objection, such notice shall be considered good and valid, and shall be hung up or affixed as hereinbefore provided.

8. The owner or agent of every coal mine or colliery shall, on the occasion and for the purpose of the inspection and examination thereof, produce and submit for examination to any such inspector as aforesaid a map or plan of the workings of such coal mine or colliery, upon which map or plan shall be delineated the several parts, aircourses, air-draws, waterways, drains, pits, levels, and shafts in and connected with such coal mine or colliery; and if such owner or agent do not produce and submit for examination as aforesaid such a map or plan as aforesaid, or if any such inspector as aforesaid find that any portion of any map or plan is withheld, or any part of the workings of any such mine or colliery is concealed from his inspection, or if he find, on examining and verifying any map or plan, that the same is imperfect or inaccurate, he is hereby empowered to require that an accurate map or plan of the actual workings of such coal mine or colliery, and the works thereto belonging, clearly delineating such matters and things as aforesaid, be made within a reasonable time, by and at the expense of the owner of such mine, on a scale of not less than two chains to one inch, or on such other scale as the plan then used in the colliery is constructed on; and every such map or plan as aforesaid shall shew the workings of the mine up to within six months of the time of inspection; and the owner or agent of the coal mine or colliery shall, if required so to do by any such inspector as aforesaid, mark or cause to be marked on such map or plan the progress of the workings of the coal mine or colliery up to the time of his inspection thereof: provided, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorise any inspector to make a copy of the whole or any part of a map or plan which shall be produced or made.

9. If and when loss of life to any person employed in or about any coal mine or colliery occurs by reason of any accident within such coal mine or colliery, or any pits or shafts thereof, or any works or machinery connected with such pits or shafts, or if any serious personal injury arises from explosion therein, the owner or agent of such mine or colliery shall, within twenty-four hours next after such loss of life, send notice of such accident, under the hand of such owner or agent, to one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, and in Scotland to the Lord Advocate, and in all cases to the inspector of the district within which such loss of life shall occur, and shall specify in such notice the probable cause of such accident, and such notice may be sent through the post-office, by letter addressed to such Secretary of State or Lord Advocate, and to the inspector of the district at his usual place of residence; and every owner or agent who neglects to send or cause to be sent such notice as aforesaid within the time aforesaid shall for such offence be liable to a penalty of not less than 10*l*. and not exceeding 20*l*.

10. Every coroner holding an inquest upon the body of any person whose death may have been caused by any such accident as aforesaid shall (unless some person be present on behalf of one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State to watch the proceedings at such inquest, or notice of such accident shall have been sent, four clear days at the least previously thereto, through the post-office, by letter addressed to one of such Secretaries of State, and the sending of the same be proved to the satisfaction of the coroner) adjourn such inquest, and by letter sent two days at the least before holding such adjourned inquest, through the post-office, addressed to one of such Secretaries of State, give notice to such Secretary of State of the time and place of holding the same: provided always, that it shall be lawful for such coroner, before the adjournment of any such inquest, to take evidence to identify the body, and to order the interment thereof.

11. If after the 31st December, 1855, any coal mine or colliery be worked, and, through the default of the owner thereof, special rules have not been established for the same, according to the provisions of this act, or the general rules or the special rules for such coal mine or colliery, by this act required to be established, have not been hung up or affixed, or have not, after obliteration or destruction, been renewed or restored, as required by this act, or any of such general rules or special rules which ought to be observed by the owner and principal agent or viewer of such coal mine or colliery be neglected or wilfully violated by any such owner, agent, or viewer, such person shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding 5*l*., and also, in case the default or neglect be not remedied with all reasonable dispatch, after notice in writing thereof given by an inspector to the owner or agent of such coal mine or colliery, to a further penalty of not exceeding 1*l*. for every day during which the offence continues after such notice; and every person other than aforesaid employed in or about a coal mine or colliery, who neglects or wilfully violates any of the special rules established for such coal mine or colliery, shall for every such offence be liable to a penalty not exceeding 2*l*., or to be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, in the common gaol or house of correction, for any period not exceeding three calendar months, or to be proceeded against and punished according to the provisions of the act 4 Geo. 4, c. 34, intitled "An Act to enlarge the Power of Justices in determining Complaints between Masters and Servants."

12. Every owner or principal agent of any coal mine or colliery who refuses or neglects to produce, as hereinbefore required, a map or plan of the workings of a colliery to any inspector, or to furnish to the said inspector the means necessary for making any entry, inspection, examination, or inquiry under this act, and every person who wilfully obstructs any inspector in the execution of this act, shall for every such offence be liable to a penalty of not less than 5*l*. and not exceeding 10*l*.

13. Every person who pulls down, injures, or defaces any notice hung up or affixed, as required by this act, shall for every such offence be liable to a penalty of not exceeding 40*s*.

14. All penalties imposed by this act may be recovered in a summary manner before two justices of the peace, or in Scotland before the sheriff having jurisdiction in the county or place where the offence is committed, within three months of the commission of the same, in the manner prescribed by the law in that behalf; and it shall be lawful for the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, upon the recommendation of one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, to direct that any penalty imposed for neglecting to send or cause to be sent notice of any accident, as required by this act, shall be paid to or among any of the family or relatives of any person or persons killed by such accident, as he may think fit; and, save as aforesaid, all penalties imposed by this act shall, when recovered, be paid, for the use of her Majesty, to the sheriff or other proper officer of the county, riding, division, or place for which the justices or other competent authority before whom the penalty is recovered shall have acted.

15. A copy of the special rules for the time being established in any coal mine or colliery, certified under the hands of one of the inspectors to be a copy of the special rules established in such coal mine or colliery, shall be evidence of such special rules, and of their being duly established under this act, without further proof.

16. Every inspector shall, on or before the 1st March in every year, make a separate and distinct report in writing of his proceedings during the preceding year, and shall transmit the same to one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, and a copy of such report shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament.

17. In the construction of this act, the term "owner" of a coal mine or colliery shall mean the immediate proprietor, lessee, or occupier of a coal mine or colliery, or of any part thereof; and the term "agent" of a mine shall mean any person having, on behalf of the owner of any mine, the care or direction thereof; and the term "inspector" or "inspectors" shall respectively mean an inspector or inspectors of coal mines appointed under the 13 & 14 Vict. or this act; and the term "district" shall mean that portion of Great Britain which shall be assigned to any one of such inspectors.

18. This act shall not extend to Ireland.

19. This act shall continue until the expiration of five years after the passing of this act, and thenceforth until the end of the then next session of Parliament.

CAP. CXI.

An Act to amend the Law relating to Bills of Lading.

[14th August, 1855.]

Sect. 1. Rights under bills of lading to vest in consignee or indorsee.

2. Not to affect right of stoppage in transitu, or claims for freight.

3. Bill of lading in hands of consignee, &c. conclusive evidence of the shipment as against master, &c. Proviso.

Whereas by the custom of merchants a bill of lading of goods being transmissible by indorsement, the property in the goods may thereby pass to the indorsee, but nevertheless all rights in respect of the contract contained in the bill of lading continue in the original shipper or owner, and it is expedient that such rights should pass with the property: and whereas it frequently happens that the goods in respect of which bills of lading purport to be signed have not been laden on board, and it is proper that such bills of lading in the hands of a bona fide holder for value should not be questioned by the Master or other person signing the same, on the ground of the goods not having been laden as aforesaid: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. Every consignee of goods named in a bill of lading, and every indorsee of a bill of lading to whom the property in the goods therein mentioned shall pass upon or by reason of such consignment or indorsement, shall have transferred to and vested in him all rights of suit, and be subject to the same liabilities in respect of such goods as if the contract contained in the bill of lading had been made with himself.

2. Nothing herein contained shall prejudice or affect any right of stoppage in transitu, or any right to claim freight against the original shipper or owner, or any liability of the consignee or indorsee by reason or in consequence of his being such consignee or indorsee, or of his receipt of the goods by reason or in consequence of such consignment or indorsement.

3. Every bill of lading in the hands of a consignee or indorsee for valuable consideration, representing goods to have been shipped on board a vessel, shall be conclusive evidence of such shipment as against the master or other person signing the same, notwithstanding that such goods or some part thereof may not have been so shipped, unless such holder of the bill of lading shall have had actual notice at the time of receiving the same that the goods had not been in fact laden on board: provided, that the master or other person so signing may exonerate himself in respect of such misrepresentation by showing that it was caused without any default on his part, and wholly by the fraud of the shipper, or of the holder, or some person under whom the holder claims.

Whereas by the act of the session holden in the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 95, "to make better Provision for the Administration of the Laws relating to the Public Health," a board was constituted, to be called "The General Board of Health," and it was thereby provided that the said board should be continued for one year next after the day of the passing of that act, and thenceforth until the end of the then next session of Parliament, and by the said act the said board were authorized to appoint a secretary and assistant secretary, and such clerks and officers of the board, and also so many superintending inspectors under such board, as the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury might think fit, every person so appointed to be removable at the pleasure of the said board: and whereas it is expedient that the said board should be continued, and should have power to appoint a medical council and a medical officer: be it enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. On the passing of this act, so much of the said act as limits the duration of the board of health shall be repealed, and the said board shall be continued for one year next after the day of the passing of this act, and thenceforth until the end of the then next session of Parliament, and no longer.

2. The said board may appoint a medical council, consisting of such number of persons as the said board, with the consent of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, may deem expedient, and may appoint a medical officer, and may assign to such council and medical officer such duties as the board may think fit; they may remove any member of such council, or such officer, and appoint another person in his stead; and they may diminish, or, with the consent of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, increase, the number of such council.

Whereas the provisions of the Nuisances Removal and Diseases Prevention Act, 1848, amended by the Nuisances Removal and Diseases Prevention Amendment Act, 1849, in so far as the same relate to the prevention or mitigation of epidemic, endemic, or contagious diseases, are defective, and it is expedient to substitute other provisions more effectual in that behalf: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. This act may be cited for all purposes as “The Diseases Prevention Act, 1855.”

2. The local authority for executing this act shall be the local authority acting in execution of any general act in force for the time being for the removal of nuisances.

3. The expenses incurred in execution of this act shall be borne out of the rates or funds administered by such local authority, under the provisions and for the purposes of any such general act as is referred to in the preceding section.

4. The local authority and their officers shall have power of entry for the purposes of this act, and for executing or superintending the execution of the regulations and directions of the general board issued under this act.

6. From time to time after the issuing of any such order as aforesaid, and whilst the same continues in force, the General Board of Health may issue directions and regulations, as the said board think fit—such medical aid and such accommodation as may be required:

And from time to time, in like manner, may revoke, renew, and alter any such directions and regulations as to the said board appears expedient, to extend to all parts in which the provisions of this act for the prevention of disease shall for the time being be put in force under such orders as aforesaid, unless such directions and regulations be expressly confined to some of such parts, and then to such parts as therein are specified; and (subject to the power of revocation and alteration herein contained) such directions and regulations shall continue in force so long as the said provisions of this act shall, under such order, be applicable to the same parts.

9. The local authority may from time to time direct any prosecutions or legal proceedings for or in respect of the wilful violation or neglect of any such direction or regulation.

10. Every order of her Majesty's Privy Council, and every direction and regulation of the General Board of Health, under this act, shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament, forthwith upon the issuing thereof, if Parliament be then sitting, and if not, then within fourteen days next after the commencement of the then next session of Parliament.

11. Orders in Council issued in pursuance of this act, for putting in force the provisions for the prevention of disease in the said Nuisances Removal and Diseases Prevention Acts contained, in Great Britain, may extend to parts and arms of the sea lying within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty; and the Board of Health for England may issue under this act directions and regulations for cleansing, purifying, ventilating, and disinfecting, and providing medical aid and accommodation, and preventing disease in ships and vessels, as well upon arms and parts of the sea aforesaid as upon inland waters.

12. Whenever, in compliance with any regulation of the General Board of Health which they may be empowered to make under this act, any medical officer appointed under and by virtue of the laws for the time being for the relief of the poor shall perform any medical service on board of any vessel, such medical officer shall be entitled to charge extra for any such service, at the general rate of his allowance for his services for the union or place for which he is appointed, and such charges shall be payable by the captain of the vessel, on behalf of the owners, together with any reasonable expenses for the treatment of the sick; and if such services shall be rendered by any medical practitioner who is not a union or parish officer, he shall be entitled to charges for any service rendered on board, with extra remuneration on account of distance, at the same rate as those which he is in the habit of receiving from private patients of the class of those attended and treated on shipboard, to be paid as aforesaid; and in case of dispute in respect of such charges, such dispute may, where the charges do not exceed 20*l.*, be determined summarily, at the place where the dispute arises, as in the case of seamen's wages not exceeding 50*l.*, according to the provisions of the law in that behalf for the time being in force; and any justice before whom complaint is made shall determine summarily as to the amount which is reasonable, according to the accustomed rate of charge within the place for attendance on patients of the like class or condition as those in respect of whom the charge is made.

13. The directions and regulations of the General Board of Health under this enactment shall be under the seal of the said board, and the hand of the president, or two or more members thereof; and any copy of such regulations purporting to bear such seal and signature, whether the said signature and seal be respectively impressed and written, or printed only, shall be evidence in all proceedings in which such regulations may come in question.

14. Whoever wilfully obstructs any person acting under the authority or employed in the execution of this act, and whose-ever wilfully violates any direction or regulation issued by the General Board of Health as aforesaid, shall be liable for every such offence to a penalty not exceeding 5*l.*, to be appropriated in or towards the defraying the expenses of executing this act.

15. The provisions of any general act in force for the removal of nuisances, with regard to the service of notices, the proof of orders or resolutions of the local authority, and the recovery of penalties, shall extend and apply to this act.

In any place in which there is no local board of health or council, and where there are or shall be trustees or commissioners under an improvement act, such trustees or commissioners:

In any place within which there is no such local board of health, nor council, body of trustees, or commissioners, and where there is or shall be a board for the repair of the highways of such place, that board :

In any place wherein there is no such local board of health, council, body of trustees, or commissioners, highway board, or committee appointed as aforesaid, and wherein there is or shall be a board of inspectors for lighting and watching under the act 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 90, that board, with the surveyors of highways :

4. On any vacancy in such nuisances removal committee, arising from death, change of residence, or otherwise, notice shall be given by the committee to the churchwardens, who shall forthwith summon a meeting of the vestry, and fill up such vacancy by election; and until such vacancy is filled up, the remaining members of the committee may act in all respects as if their number was complete.

5. The local authority may appoint any committee of their own body to receive notices, take proceedings, and in all or certain specified respects execute this act, whereof two shall be a quorum; and such local authority or their committee may, in each particular case, by order in writing under the hand of the chairman of such body or committee, empower any officer or person to make complaints and take proceedings on their behalf.

6. In extra-parochial places not comprised within the jurisdiction of any of the local authorities aforesaid, and having a population of not less than 200 persons, the local authority for the execution of this act shall be a nuisances removal committee, elected annually by the householders within the extra-parochial place :

Out of general district rates, where the local authority is a local board of health :

Out of the borough fund or borough rate, where the local authority is the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses, by the council; or if there be an improvement act for the borough administered by the council, then out of rates levied thereunder applicable to the purposes of such improvement act; or in the city of London and the liberties thereof, any rates or funds administered by the commissioners of sewers for the said city and liberties :

Provided always, that in the city of Oxford and borough of Cambridge such expenses shall be deemed annual charges and expenses of cleansing the streets of the said city and borough respectively, and shall be so payable :

And if there be no such rates or funds, or if the local authority be the guardians and surveyors of highways, then out of the rates or funds applicable to the relief of the poor of the parish or place wherein such rates or funds are collected or arise, if such parish or place be co-extensive with the district within which the charges and expenses are incurred; but if such parish or place be now, or hereafter shall be, partly comprised within and partly without the limits of a place where a local authority, other than a highway board, nuisances removal committee, inspectors of watching and lighting, and surveyors or guardians and surveyors, exists or shall exist, all the charges and expenses incurred in the district comprising that part of the parish or place which is excluded from such limits shall be defrayed out of any highway rate or rates, or any funds applicable in lieu thereof, collected or raised within the part so excluded; and if there be more than one highway rate collected within such district, the local authority shall settle the proportion in which the respective parties or places liable thereto shall bear such charges and expenses; and if any portion of such excluded part be exempt from such highway rate or rates, then all the charges and expenses incurred in the whole of such excluded part shall be defrayed out of any district police rate or other rate which may by the act 12 & 13 Vict. c. 65, be raised and assessed upon such excluded part :

And when the local authority has not control of such rates or funds, the officer or person having the custody or control thereof shall pay over the amount to the local authority, on the order of two justices, directed to such officer or person; and on neglect or refusal to pay the sum specified in such order for six days after the service thereof, the same may, by warrant under the hands of the same or any two justices, be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the officer or person in default, and such levy shall include the costs of such distress and sale :

In extra-parochial places having a population of not less than 200 persons, out of a rate assessed by the local authority on all such property in the place as would be assessable to highway rate if such rate were levied therein :

In extra-parochial places having a population of less than 200 persons, out of a similar rate assessed by the surveyor of highways of the adjacent place having the largest common boundary with such extra-parochial place :

And the local authority in the first case, and the surveyor of highways in the second, may levy and collect the sums so assessed, in the same manner, and with the same remedies in case of any default in payment thereof, and with the same right of appeal against the amount of such assessment reserved to the person assessed, as are provided by the law in force for the time being with regard to rates for the repair of highways.

9. The local authority shall, for the purposes of this act, appoint or employ, or join with other local authorities in appointing or employing, a sanitary inspector or inspectors, and may appoint a convenient place for his or their office, and may allow to every such person on account of his employment a proper salary or allowance; and where local authorities join in such appointment or employment, they may apportion among themselves the payment of such salary or allowance: provided always, that where the local authority has already appointed an officer who executes the duties of such inspector under any improvement act, it shall not be necessary to appoint any other inspector under this act, but the inspector acting in execution of the improvement act shall have all the powers, authorities, and privileges granted to any inspector appointed under this act.

10. 11. The local authority shall have power of entry for the following purposes of this act, and under the following conditions:—

For this purpose, when they or any of their officers have reasonable grounds for believing that a nuisance exists on any private premises, demand may be made by them or their officer, on any person having custody of the premises, of admission to inspect the same, at any hour between nine in the morning and six in the evening; and if admission be not granted, any justice having jurisdiction in the place may, on oath made before him of belief in the existence of the nuisance, and after reasonable notice of the intended application to such justice being given in writing to the party on whose premises the nuisance is believed to exist, by order under his hand require the person having the custody of the premises to admit the local authority or their officer; and if no person having custody of the premises can be discovered, any such justice may and shall, on oath made before him of belief in the existence of such nuisance, and of the fact that no person having custody of the premises can be discovered, by order under his hand authorise the local authority or their officers to enter the premises between the hours aforesaid.

2. To examine premises where nuisances exist, to ascertain the course of drains, and to execute or inspect works ordered by justices to be done under this act.

For these purposes, whenever, under the provisions of this act, a nuisance has been ascertained to exist, or when an order of abatement or prohibition under this act has been made, or when it becomes necessary to ascertain the course of a drain, the local authority may enter on the premises, by themselves or their officers, between the hours aforesaid, until the nuisance shall have been abated, or the course of the drain shall have been ascertained, or the works ordered to be done shall have been completed, as the case may be.

3. To remove or abate a nuisance in case of non-compliance with or infringement of the order of justices, or to inspect or examine any carcase, meat, poultry, game, flesh, fish, fruit, vegetables, corn, bread, or flour, under the powers and for the purposes of this act.

For this purpose the local authority or their officer may from time to time enter the premises where the nuisance exists, or the carcase, meat, poultry, game, flesh, fish, fruit, vegetables, corn, bread, or flour is found, at all reasonable hours, or at all hours during which business is carried on on such premises, without notice.

PART II.

With regard to the removal of nuisances, be it enacted thus:—

12. In any case where a nuisance is so ascertained by the local authority to exist, or where the nuisance in their opinion did exist at the time when the notice was given, and, although the same may have been since removed or discontinued, is in their opinion likely to recur or to be repeated on the same premises or any part thereof, they shall cause complaint thereof to be made before a justice of the peace; and such justice shall thereupon issue a summons requiring the person by whose act, default, permission, or sufferance the nuisance arises or continues, or if such person cannot be found or ascertained, the owner or occupier of the premises on which the nuisance arises, to appear before any two justices, in petty sessions assembled, at their usual place of meeting, who shall proceed to inquire into the said complaint; and if it be proved to their satisfaction that the nuisance exists, or did exist at the time when the notice was given, or, if removed or discontinued since the notice was given, that it is likely to recur or to be repeated, the justices shall make an order in writing under their hands and seals on such person, owner, or occupier for the abatement or discontinuance and prohibition of the nuisance as hereinafter mentioned, and shall also make an order for the payment of all costs incurred up to the time of hearing or making the order for abatement or discontinuance or prohibition of the nuisance.

13. By their order the justices may require the person on whom it is made to provide sufficient privy accommodation, means of drainage or ventilation, or to make safe and habitable, or to pave, cleanse, whitewash, disinfect, or purify the premises which are a nuisance or injurious to health, or such part thereof as the justices may direct in their order, or to drain, empty, cleanse, fill up, amend, or remove the injurious pool, ditch, gutter, watercourse, privy, urinal, cesspool, drain, or ashpit which is a nuisance or injurious to health, or to provide a substitute for that complained of, or to carry away the accumulation or deposit which is a nuisance or injurious to health, or to provide for the cleanly and wholesome keeping of the animal kept so as to be a nuisance or injurious to health, or if it be proved to the justices to be impossible so to provide, then to remove the animal, or any or all of these things, (according to the nature of the nuisance), or to do such other works or acts as are necessary to abate the nuisance complained of, in such manner and within such time as in such order shall be specified; and if the justices are of opinion that such or the like nuisance is likely to recur, the justices may further prohibit the recurrence of it, and direct the works necessary to prevent such recurrence, as the case may in the judgment of such justices require; and if the nuisance proved to exist be such as to render a house or building, in the judgment of the justices, unfit for human habitation, they may prohibit the using thereof for that purpose until it is rendered fit for that purpose in the judgment of the justices; and on their being satisfied that it has been rendered fit for such purpose, they may determine their previous order by another declaring such house habitable, from the date of which other order such house may be let or inhabited.

14. Any person not obeying the said order for abatement shall, if he fail to satisfy the justices that he has used all due diligence to carry out such order, be liable for every such offence to a penalty of not more than 10s. per day during his default; and any person knowingly and wilfully acting contrary to the said order of prohibition shall be liable for every such offence to a penalty not exceeding 20s. per day during such contrary action; and the local authority may, under the powers of entry given by this act, enter the premises to which the order relates, and remove or abate the nuisance condemned or prohibited, and do whatever may be necessary in execution of such order, and charge the cost to the person on whom the order is made, as hereinafter provided.

15. Any such order of prohibition may be appealed against as provided in this act.

16. When it shall appear to the justices that the execution of structural works is required for the abatement of a nuisance, they may direct such works to be carried out under the direction or with the consent or approval of any public board, trustees, or commissioners having jurisdiction in the place in respect of such works; and if within seven days from the date of the order the person on whom it is made shall have given notice to the local authority of his intention to appeal against it as provided in this act, and shall have entered into recognisances to try such appeal as provided by this act, and shall appeal accordingly, no liability to penalty shall arise, nor shall any work be done or proceedings taken under such order, until after the determination of such appeal, unless such appeal cease to be prosecuted.

17. Whenever it appears, to the satisfaction of the justices, that the person by whose act or default the nuisance arises, or the owner or occupier of the premises, is not known or cannot be found, then such order may be addressed to and executed by such local authority, and the costs defrayed out of the rates or funds applicable to the execution of this act.

18. Any matter or thing removed by the local authority in pursuance of this enactment may be sold by public auction, after not less than five days' notice by posting bills distributed in the locality, unless in cases where the delay would be prejudicial to health, when the justices may direct the immediate removal, destruction, or sale of the matter or thing; and the money arising from the sale retained by the local authority, and applied in payment of all expenses incurred under this act with reference to such nuisance, and the surplus, if any, shall be paid, on demand, by the local authority, to the owner of such matter or thing.

19. All reasonable costs and expenses from time to time incurred in making a complaint, or giving notice, or in obtaining an order of justices under this act, or in carrying the same into effect under this act, shall be deemed to be money paid for the use and at the request of the person on whom the order is made; or if the order be made on the local authority, or if no order be made, but the nuisance be proved to have existed when the complaint was made or the notice given, then of the person by whose act or default the nuisance was caused; and in case of nuisances caused by the act or default of the owner of premises, the said premises shall be and continue chargeable with such costs and expenses, and also with the amount of any penalties incurred under this act, until the same be fully discharged, provided that such costs and expenses shall not exceed in the whole one year's rack-rent of the premises; and such costs and expenses and penalties, together with the charges of suing for the same, may be recovered in any county or superior court, or, if the local authority think fit, before any two justices of the peace; and the said justices shall have power to divide such costs, expenses, and penalties between the persons by whose act or default the nuisance arises, in such manner as they shall consider reasonable; and if it appear to them that a complaint made under this act is frivolous or unfounded, they may order the payment by the local authority or person making the complaint of the costs incurred by the person against whom the complaint is made, or any part thereof.

20. Where any costs, expenses, or penalties are due under or in consequence of any order of justices made in pursuance of this act as aforesaid, any justice of the peace, upon the application of the local authority, shall issue a summons requiring the person from whom they are due to appear before two justices, at a time and place to be named therein; and upon proof to the satisfaction of the justices present that any such costs, expenses, or penalties are so due, such justices, unless they think fit to excuse the party summoned upon the ground of poverty or other special circumstances, shall, by order in writing under their hands and seals, order him to pay the amount to the local authority at once, or by such instalments as the justices think fit, together with the charges attending such application and the proceedings thereon; and if the amount of such order, or any instalment thereof, be not paid within fourteen days after the same is due, the same may, by warrant of the said or other justices, be levied by distress and sale.

21. All surveyors and district surveyors may make, scour, cleanse, and keep open all ditches, gutters, drains, or watercourses in and through any lands or grounds adjoining or lying near to any highway, upon paying the owner or occupier of such lands or grounds, provided they are not waste or common, for the damages which he shall thereby sustain, to be settled and paid in such manner as the damages for getting materials in inclosed lands or grounds are directed to be settled and paid by the law in force for the time being with regard to highways.

22. Whenever any ditch, gutter, drain, or watercourse used or partly used for the conveyance of any water, filth, sewage, or other matter from any house, buildings, or premises is a nuisance within the meaning of this act, and cannot, in the

23. Any person or company engaged in the manufacture of gas who shall at any time cause or suffer to be brought or to flow into any stream, reservoir, or aqueduct, pond, or place for water, or into any drain communicating therewith, any washing or other substance produced in making or supplying gas, or shall wilfully do any act connected with the making or supplying of gas whereby the water in any such stream, reservoir, aqueduct, pond, or place for water shall be fouled, shall forfeit for every such offence the sum of 200*l*.

24. Such penalty may be recovered, with full costs of suit, in any of the superior courts, by the person into whose water such washing or other substance shall be conveyed or shall flow, or whose water shall be fouled by any such act as aforesaid; or if there be no such person, or in default of proceedings by such person after notice to him from the local authority of their intention to proceed for such penalty, by the local authority; but such penalty shall not be recoverable unless it be sued for during the continuance of the offence, or within six months after it shall have ceased.

25. In addition to the said penalty of 200*l*., (and whether such penalty shall have been recovered or not), the person or company so offending shall forfeit the sum of 20*l*., (to be recovered in the like manner) for each day during which such washing or other substance shall be brought or shall flow as aforesaid, or during which the act by which such water shall be fouled shall continue, after the expiration of twenty-four hours from the time when notice of the offence shall have been served on such person or company by the local authority, or the person into whose water such washing or other substance shall be brought or flow, or whose water shall be fouled thereby, and such penalty shall be paid to the parties from whom such notice shall proceed; and all monies recovered by a local authority under this or the preceding section shall, after payment of any damage caused by the act for which the penalty is imposed, be applied towards defraying the expenses of executing this act.

26. The sanitary inspector may at all reasonable times inspect and examine any carcase, meat, poultry, game, flesh, fish, fruit, vegetables, corn, bread, or flour exposed for sale, or in the course of or on their way to slaughtering, dressing, or preparation for sale or use, or landed from any ship or vessel in any port in England; and in case any such carcase, meat, poultry, game, flesh, fish, fruit, vegetables, corn, bread, or flour appear to him to be unfit for such food, the same may be seized; and if it appear to a justice that any such carcase, meat, poultry, game, flesh, fish, fruit, vegetables, corn, bread,

27. If any candle-house, melting-house, melting-place, or soap-house, or any slaughter-house, or any building or place for boiling offal or blood, or for boiling, burning, or crushing bones, or any manufactory, building, or place used for any trade, business, process, or manufacture causing effluvia, be at any time certified to the local authority by any medical officer, or any two legally qualified medical practitioners, to be a nuisance, or injurious to the health of the inhabitants of the neighbourhood, the local authority shall direct complaint to be made before any justice, who may summon before any two justices in petty sessions, assembled at their usual place of meeting, the person by or in whose behalf the work so complained of is carried on, and such justices shall inquire into such complaint; and if it shall appear to such justices that the trade or business carried on by the person complained against is a nuisance, or causes any effluvia injurious to the health of the inhabitants of the neighbourhood, and that such person shall not have used the best practicable means for abating such nuisance or preventing or counteracting such effluvia, the person so offending (being the owner or occupier of the premises, or being a foreman or other person employed by such owner or occupier) shall, upon a summary conviction for such offence, forfeit and pay a sum of not more than 5*l.* nor less than 40*s.*, and upon a second conviction for such offence the sum of 10*l.*, and for each subsequent conviction a sum double the amount. of the penalty imposed for the last preceding conviction, but the highest amount of such penalty shall not in any case exceed the sum of 200*l.*: provided always, that the justices may suspend their final determination in any such case, upon condition that the person so complained against shall undertake to adopt, within a reasonable time, such means as the said justices shall judge to be practicable, and order to be carried into effect, for abating such nuisance, or mitigating or preventing the injurious effects of such effluvia, or shall give notice of appeal in the manner provided by this act, and shall enter into recognisances to try such appeal, and shall appeal accordingly: provided always, that the provisions hereinbefore contained shall not extend or be applicable to any place without the limits of any city, town, or populous district.

28. Provided also, that if, upon his appearance before such justices, the party complained against object to have the matter determined by such justices, and enter into recognisances, with sufficient sureties, to be approved by the justices, to abide the event of any proceedings at law or in equity that may be had against him on account of the subject-matter of complaint, the local authority shall thereupon abandon all proceedings before the justices, and shall forthwith take proceedings at law or in equity in her Majesty's superior courts for preventing or abating the nuisance complained of.

29. Whenever the medical officer of health, if there be one, or if none, whenever two qualified medical practitioners, shall certify to the local authority that any house is so overcrowded as to be dangerous or prejudicial to the health of the inhabitants, and the inhabitants shall consist of more than one family, the local authority shall cause proceedings to be taken before the justices to abate such overcrowding, and the justices shall thereupon make such order as they may think fit, and the person permitting such overcrowding shall forfeit a sum not exceeding 40*s.*

30. The local authority may, within the area of their jurisdiction, direct any proceedings to be taken at law or in equity in cases coming within the purview of this act, and may order proceedings to be taken for the recovery of any penalties, and for the punishment of any persons offending against the provisions of this act, or in relation to appeals under this act, and may order the expenses of all such proceedings to be paid out of the rates or funds administered by them under this act.

PART III.

And with regard to procedure under this act, be it enacted, that—

31. Notices, summonses, and orders under this act may be served by delivering the same to or at the residence of the persons to whom they are respectively addressed, and where addressed to the owner or occupier of premises they may also be served by delivering the same, or a true copy thereof, to some person upon the premises; or if there be no person upon the premises who can be so served, by fixing the same upon some conspicuous part of the premises; or if the person shall reside at a distance of more than five miles from the office of the inspector, then by a registered letter through the post.

32. Copies of any orders or resolutions of the local authority or their committee, purporting to be signed by the chairman of such body or committee, shall, unless the contrary be shewn, be received as evidence thereof, without proof of their meeting, or of the official character or signature of the person signing the same.

33. Where proceedings under this act are to be taken against several persons in respect of one nuisance caused by the joint act or default of such persons, it shall be lawful for the local authority to include such persons in one complaint, and for the justices to include such persons in one summons, and any order made in such a case may be made upon all or any number of the persons included in the summons, and the costs may be distributed as to the justices may appear fair and reasonable.

34. In case of any demand or complaint under this act to which two or more persons, being owners or occupiers of premises, or partly the one or partly the other, may be answerable jointly, or in common or severally, it shall be sufficient to proceed against any one or more of them, without proceeding against the others or other of them; but nothing herein contained shall prevent the parties so proceeded against from recovering contribution in any case in which they would now be entitled to contribution by law.

35. Whenever, in any proceeding under this act, whether written or otherwise, it shall become necessary to mention or refer to the owner or occupier of any premises, it shall be sufficient to designate him as the "owner" or "occupier" of such premises, without name or further description.

36. Whoever refuses to obey an order of justices under this act for admission on premises of the local authority or their officers, or willfully obstructs any person acting under the authority or employed in the execution of this act, shall be liable for every such offence to a penalty not exceeding 5*l.*

37. If the occupier of any premises prevent the owner thereof from obeying or carrying into effect the provisions of this act, any justice to whom application is made in this behalf shall by order in writing require such occupier to desist from such prevention, or to permit the execution of the works required to be executed, provided that such works appear to such justice to be necessary for the purpose of obeying or carrying into effect the provisions of this act; and if within twenty-four hours after the service of such order the occupier against whom it is made do not comply therewith, he shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding 5*l.* for every day afterwards during the continuance of such non-compliance.

38. Penalties imposed by this act for offences committed and sums of money ordered to be paid under this act may be recovered by persons thereto competent in England according to the provisions of the act of the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43; and all penalties recovered by the local authority under this act shall be paid to them, to be by them applied in aid of their expenses under this act.

39. No order, nor any other proceeding, matter, or thing done or transacted in or relating to the execution of this act, shall be vacated, quashed, or set aside for want of form; nor shall any order, nor any other proceeding, matter, or thing done or transacted in relation to the execution of this act, be removed or removeable by certiorari, or by any other writ or process whatsoever, into any of the superior courts; and proceedings under this act against several persons included in one complaint shall not abate by reason of the death of any among the persons so included, but all such proceedings may be carried on as if the deceased person had not been originally so included.

40. Appeals under this act shall be to the court of quarter sessions held next after the making of the order appealed against; but the appellant shall not be heard in support of the appeal unless within fourteen days after the making of the order appealed against he give to the local authority notice in writing, stating his intention to bring such appeal, together with a statement in writing of the grounds of appeal, and shall within two days of giving such notice enter into a recognisance before some justice of the peace, with sufficient securities, conditioned to try such appeal at the said court, and to abide the order of and pay such costs as shall be awarded by the justices at such court, or any adjournment thereof; and the said court, upon hearing and finally determining the matter of the appeal, may, according to its discretion, award such costs to the party appealing or appealed against as they shall think proper, and its determination in or concerning the premises shall be conclusive and binding on all persons to all intents or purposes whatsoever: provided always, that if there be not time to give such notice and enter into such recognisance as aforesaid, then such appeal may be made to, and such notice, statement, and recognisance be given and entered into for, the next sessions at which the appeal can be heard: provided also, that on the hearing of the appeal no grounds of appeal shall be gone into or entertained other than those set forth in such statement as aforesaid: provided also, that in any case of appeal the court of quarter sessions may, if they think fit, state the facts specially for the determination of her Majesty's Court of Queen's Bench, in which case it shall be lawful to remove the proceedings, by writ of certiorari or otherwise, into the said Court of Queen's Bench.

41. The forms contained in the schedule to this act annexed, or any forms to the like effect, varied as circumstances may require, may be used for instruments under this act, and shall be sufficient for the purpose intended.

42. The local authority, and any officer or person acting under the authority, and in execution or intended execution, of this act, shall be entitled to such protection and privilege in actions and suits, and such exemption from personal liability, as are granted to local boards of health and their officers by the law in force for the time being.

43. Nothing in this act shall be construed to affect the provisions of any local act as to matters included in this act, nor to impair, abridge, or take away any power, jurisdiction, or authority which may at any time be vested in any commissioners of sewers or of drainage, or to take away or interfere with any course of proceedings which might be resorted to or adopted by such commissioners if this act had not passed, nor to impair any power of abating nuisances at common law, nor any jurisdiction in respect of nuisances that may be possessed by any authority under the act intitled "An Act to abate the Nuisances arising from the Smoke of Furnaces in the Metropolis, and from Steam Vessels above London Bridge," or the Common Lodging-houses Acts, the Act for the Regulation of Municipal Corporations, the Public Health Act, or any improvement act respectively, or any acts incorporated with such acts; and authorities may respectively proceed for the abatement of nuisances, or in respect of any other matter or thing hereinbefore provided or referred to, either under the acts mentioned in this section, or any other act conferring jurisdiction in respect of the nuisances referred to in this act, or any bye-laws framed under any such act, as they may think fit; and the local authorities constituted under and for the purposes of the Common Lodging-houses Acts, 1851 and 1853, shall, for the purposes of those acts, have all the powers of local authorities under this act.

44. Nothing herein contained shall enable any local authority, surveyor of highways, or other person, either with or without any order of justices, to injuriously affect the navigation of any river or canal, or to divert or diminish any supply of water of right belonging to any such river or canal; and the provisions of this act shall not extend or be construed to extend to mines of different descriptions, so as to interfere with or obstruct the efficient working of the same, or to the smelting of ores and minerals, or to the manufacturing of the produce of such ores and minerals.

45. No power given by this act shall be exercised in such manner as to injuriously affect the supply, quality, or fall of water contained in any reservoir or stream, or any feeders of such reservoir or stream, belonging to or supplying any water-work established by act of Parliament, or in cases where any company or individual are entitled for their own benefit to the use of such reservoir or stream, or to the supply of water contained in such feeders, without the consent in writing of the company or corporation in whom such waterworks may be vested, or of the parties so entitled to the use of such reservoirs, streams, and feeders, and also of the owners thereof in cases where the owners and parties so entitled are not the same person.

46. In citing this act in other acts of Parliament, and in legal instruments and other proceedings, it shall be sufficient to use the words "The Nuisances Removal Act for England, 1855."

Whereas it is expedient to extend and amend the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, as hereinafter provided: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. The Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, hereinafter called "the principal act," and this act, shall be construed together as one act, and any provisions of the principal act inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

2. So much of the principal act (sect. 4) as provides that after the 31st March, 1857, an annual salary shall be paid to one only of the commissioners besides the chief commissioner, is hereby repealed.

3. It shall be lawful for her Majesty and her successors, under the royal sign-manual, to appoint additional inspectors (not exceeding three in number) for the purposes of this act and the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, and such additional inspectors shall hold office during pleasure, and shall be possessed of the same powers, authorities, and jurisdiction, and be entitled to the same privileges and emoluments, as the inspectors appointed under the said former act of 1853.

4. Every act of the board may be sufficiently authenticated by the seal of the commissioners, and the signature of their secretary, or, in his absence, of the chief clerk.

5. All orders, certificates, schemes, and other documents issued under the seal of the board shall be deemed and taken to be the originals, and copies thereof shall be entered in the books of the board, and all such entries may be sufficiently certified by the signature of the secretary, or, in his absence, of the chief clerk: every order, certificate, scheme, and other document purporting to be sealed with the seal of the board shall be received in evidence without further proof; and any writing purporting to be a copy extracted from the said books, and to be certified as aforesaid, shall be received in evidence in like manner.

6. The board, or any commissioner or inspector, such inspector acting under the authority of the board, may require written accounts and statements and answers to inquiries relating to any charity, or the property or income thereof, to be rendered or made to them respectively by all or any of the following persons; that is to say,

Trustees or persons acting or concerned in the administration of the charity, its property or income, or in the receipt or payment of any monies thereof:

Agents of any such trustees or persons:

Depositaries of any funds or monies of the charity:

Persons in the beneficial receipt of any funds thereof, or of any income or stipend therefrom:

Persons having the possession or control of any documents concerning the charity, or any property thereof:

And the board or the commissioner or inspector may require the persons rendering or making any such account, statement, or answer to verify the same by oath or otherwise, and may administer such oath: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall extend to give to the said board or their inspectors any power of requiring from any person holding or claiming to hold any property whatsoever adversely to any charity, or free or discharged from any charitable trust or charge, any information, or the production of any deed or document whatever, in relation to the property so held or claimed adversely, or any charitable trust or charge alleged to affect the same.

7. The board, or any commissioner or inspector acting as aforesaid, may require all or any such trustees and persons as aforesaid to attend before them respectively, at such times and places as may be reasonably appointed, for the purpose of being examined in relation to the charity, and to answer such questions as may be proposed to them, and to produce upon such examination any documents in their custody or power relating to the charity or the property thereof, and may examine upon oath or otherwise all such persons and all persons voluntarily attending, and may administer such oath: provided always, that no person shall be obliged to travel, in obedience to any such requisition, more than ten miles from his place of abode.

8. All requisitions made under the foregoing authorities shall be made respectively by the order of the board, or by precept, under the hand of the commissioner or inspector making the same.

9. Any person refusing or wilfully neglecting to comply with any such requisition, or with any order of the board, made under the provisions of this act or the principal act, or destroying or withholding any document required to be produced or transmitted by him, shall be taken to be guilty of a contempt of the High Court of Chancery, and shall be liable to be attached and committed by such court, on summary application by the commissioners to the same court or to any judge thereof, and shall pay such costs attending such contempt as the said court or judge shall direct: provided always, that the court may at any time discharge, on such terms as it may deem just, any person attached or committed on any such application, or on any application made under sect. 14 of the principal act.

10. Where any parish or ecclesiastical district entitled to the benefit of a charity has or shall have been divided into separate parishes or ecclesiastical districts, and no apportionment of charities originally applicable to the parish or district so divided shall have been made by Parliament or other competent authority, the board, in respect of all charities the gross annual income whereof does not for the time being exceed 30*l.*, may apportion the benefit of the charity between each new parish or district, or any portion thereof taken from the parish or district originally entitled to the whole benefit, and the remainder of such last-mentioned parish or district, in such manner and such proportions as, upon a consideration of the purposes of the charity, the population of each parish or district, and other circumstances, they may think fit, and may also apportion the principal endowments between such parishes or districts, if it be thought fit, and may appoint separate trustees of any part of the endowments.

11. The certificate of the board, that according to their judgment the gross yearly income of any charity does not for the time being exceed 30*l.*, shall be sufficient evidence of the amount of such annual income for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction under the foregoing provision.

12. Any court or judge having jurisdiction to order the transfer of stock in the public funds, or stock or shares of any public company, to the official trustees of charitable funds, shall have power also to authorise such trustees to call for a transfer of and to transfer such stock or shares, and may also order the payment to the same trustees of any principal monies of any charity, under the same circumstances in which the transfer of stock to them may now be ordered.

13. No order for apportioning the benefits of any charity shall be made by the board until after such public notices shall have been given of the proposal to make the same as the board may consider expedient for insuring publicity in each parish or district in which the charity is or ought to be applied, or among all persons interested therein, nor until after the expiration of one month from the publication of such notice; and every such notice shall contain (so far as conveniently may be) sufficient particulars of the proposed order to shew the objects thereof, and shall prescribe a time within which any objections thereto may be stated or transmitted to the board.

14. All objections which may be made to any proposed order shall be considered by the board, who may suspend the making thereof for further inquiry, or may modify the same, as may be found expedient; and a copy of every such order when made shall, in the case of any local charity, be deposited for the space of one month in some convenient place within the parish or one of the parishes or the district in which the charity is applicable, and also be open to inspection at the office of the commissioners, and such publicity shall be given thereto among all persons interested in the charity as the board shall consider expedient; or if the charity be not local, then a copy of such order shall be open to inspection at the office of the commissioners, and public notice thereof shall be given in such manner as to the board shall seem fit; and in cases where there is a special visitor, notice shall be given to him.

15. The secretary for the time being of the board shall be a corporation sole, by the name of the "Official Trustees of Charity Lands," for taking and holding charity lands, and by that name (instead of the name of "Treasurer of Public Charities") shall have perpetual succession; and all land, or estates or interests in land, now vested in the "Treasurer of Public Charities" by that name, shall become, upon the passing of this act, and by virtue thereof, vested in like manner, and upon the same trusts, in the "Official Trustees of Charity Lands;" and all provisions of the principal act which have reference to the "Treasurer of Public Charities" shall operate as if the name of the "Official Trustees of Charity Lands" had been used therein instead of the name of "Treasurer of Public Charities."

16. The acting trustees of every charity, or the majority of them, provided that such majority do not consist of less than three persons, shall have at law and in equity power to grant all such leases or tenancies of land belonging thereto, and vested in the official trustee of charity lands, as they would have power to grant in the due administration of the charity if the same land were legally vested in themselves; and all covenants, conditions, and remedies contained in or incident to any lease or tenancy so granted shall be enforceable by and against the trustees or persons acting in the administration of the charity for the time being, and their aliases or assigns, in like manner as if such lands had been legally vested in the trustees granting such lease or tenancy at the time of the execution thereof, and had legally remained in or had devolved to such trustees or administrators for the time being, their aliases or assigns, subject to the same lease or tenancy.

17. The Lord Chancellor may from time to time, by writing under his hand, appoint any persons to be, jointly with the secretary for the time being of the said board, the official trustees of charitable funds, and remove any such trustees; and every such appointment or removal shall be published in the London Gazette.

18. The present official trustees of charitable funds, and their successors to be so appointed, shall have perpetual succession by the name of the "Official Trustees of Charitable Funds," and may hold by that name stock in the public funds, and stock and shares of any public company, securities, and monies, which shall respectively devolve to their successors, the official trustees of charitable funds for the time being, without transfer or assignment.

19. All stock in the public funds vested in the joint names of Henry Morgan Vane, Thomas Hare, and Walker Skirrow, Esqrs., the present official trustees of charitable funds, shall, upon the passing of this act, be transferred by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England from their names to the account of the official trustees of charitable funds.

20. The official trustees of charitable funds shall, for the purposes of their trust, keep a banking account in their official name in the books of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, and the secretary of the board shall keep separate accounts of the monies held upon such account, and belonging to each separate charity.

21. All orders for payment of any money held upon such banking account shall be signed by one at least of the official trustees of charitable funds, not being the secretary of the board, and also by the secretary, and shall be countersigned by one of the commissioners, or shall be otherwise signed or authenticated in such manner as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time, by order under his hand, direct; and such orders shall be a sufficient authority to the Bank paying the same for all such payments.

22. Any trustee or other person may, on obtaining an order of the board for the purpose, transfer any stock or pay any money to the official trustees of charitable funds in trust for any charity.

23. All principal monies belonging to any charity directed to be paid to the official trustees of charitable funds shall be paid to their account at the Bank, and, subject to any order of the court or judge or of the board by which respectively the payment shall have been authorised, shall be forthwith invested in the public funds in the names of the official trustees of charitable funds, for the benefit of the charity to which they shall belong.

24. The dividends arising from all stock in the public funds standing in the name of the official trustees of charitable funds shall from time to time be received by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, under the authority of this act, for the credit of the said official trustees, and shall be placed to their banking account accordingly; and all dividends and interest arising from any other stock, shares, or securities standing in the name of or held by the official trustees of charitable funds shall be paid only to the Governor and Company of the Bank of England for the account of the same trustees; and the said trustees shall from time to time execute to the said Governor and Company all such powers as shall be found necessary for enabling them to receive and give effectual discharges for the last-mentioned dividends and interest.

25. No transfer of any stock, shares, or securities shall be made to the official trustees of charitable funds, nor shall any money other than the dividends or interest of any such stock, shares, or securities as aforesaid be paid to their account, except in pursuance of an order of the Court of Chancery, or of some judge thereof, or of a district court of bankruptcy or county court, or of the board; and no transfer of any such stock, shares, or securities shall be made by the official trustees, except under the order of such court or judge, or under the order of the board signed by two commissioners, or authenticated in such manner as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time, by any order under his hand, direct; and no transfer to or by the official trustees shall be permitted by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, or any other company, contrary to this provision.

26. Copies of all orders made by any court or judge for any transfer, deposit, or payment of stock, shares, securities, or monies to or by the official trustees of charitable funds shall be forthwith transmitted to the board by the parties obtaining such orders.

27. Every order made under the principal act or this act, requiring or authorising the transfer, payment, or deposit of any stock, shares, securities, or monies to or with the trustees of any charity, or the official trustees of charitable funds, or conferring a right to call for or to make such transfer, shall be a complete indemnity to the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, and all companies and persons, for any act done pursuant to such order; and the said Governor and Company, and other companies and persons, shall be required to give effect or to conform to every such order, and it shall not be necessary for them to inquire concerning the propriety of such order, or the jurisdiction of the court or judge or the board to make the same.

28. All dividends arising from any stock in the public funds standing in the name of the official trustees of charitable funds, and which shall be certified by the board to the Governor and Company of the Bank of England to be exempt from the property or income tax, shall be paid or carried to the banking account of the official trustees without any deduction of such tax; and all dividends arising from any stock in the public funds standing in any other names or name, and which the board shall certify to the Governor and Company of the Bank of England to be subject only to charitable trusts, and to be exempt from such tax, shall be paid without any deduction thereof.

29. It shall not be lawful for the trustees or persons acting in the administration of any charity to make or grant, otherwise than with the express authority of Parliament under any act already passed or which may hereafter be passed, or of a court or judge of competent jurisdiction, or according to a scheme legally established, or with the approval of the board, any sale, mortgage, or charge of the charity estate, or any lease thereof in reversion after more than three years of any existing term, or for any term of life, or in consideration, wholly or in part, of any fine, or for any term of years exceeding twenty-one years.

30. So much of sect. 21 of the principal act as requires a compulsory provision to be inserted in every mortgage for the payment of the principal money borrowed by annual instalments, and for the redemption and reconveyance of the mortgaged estates within the period of not more than thirty years, is hereby repealed; but the board authorising any mortgage to be made of any charity estate shall make such provisions, by the same or any other order, as to them may seem necessary for directing the trustees or persons administering the charity to discharge the principal debt, or any part thereof, by such yearly or other instalments, within thirty years from the date of the security, as to the said board may seem fit, or to form an accumulation or sinking fund out of the income of the charity for discharging the principal debt, or any portion thereof, within the same period, and shall give directions as to the investment and accumulation of such fund, and the trustees for the time being, or persons administering the charity, shall carry such order into effect.

31. The 23rd section of the principal act shall extend to authorise a compromise or adjustment of any claim, demand, or cause of suit against any charity, or the trustees or administrators thereof, and the order of the board in relation thereto shall have the like effect as in the case of any compromise or adjustment for which provision is made by the said section.

32. The board may authorise the application of any funds belonging to any charity in payments for equality of exchange or partition, or in payment of any expenses incident thereto, or may authorise the trustees to raise any money for such purposes by mortgage of any land acquired on such exchange or partition, or belonging to the charity.

33. Where there shall be uncertainty as to the specific part of any lands out of which any rent, annuity, or other periodical payment, not exceeding the yearly sum of 10*l.*, charged upon some part of the same lands, for the benefit of a charity, shall be payable, it shall be lawful for the board, upon the application of the trustees or persons acting in the administration of the charity, and with the consent of the persons interested, according to the aforesaid definition of "persons interested," in the same lands, to determine by their order the land charged with such rent, annuity, or other periodical payment, which shall thenceforth stand charged with such rent, annuity, or periodical payment accordingly, to the exoneration of the residue of such lands therefrom.

34. The expenses incident to the application for and procuring of any such order of exchange or partition, or order determining the land charged with any rent, annuity, or periodical payment, shall be paid by the trustees or administrators of the charity, or by the other parties to such transactions, or by both, as the board may direct.

35. Any incorporated charity, or the trustees of any charity, whether incorporated or not, may, with the consent of the board, invest money arising from any sale of land belonging to the charity, or received by way of equality of exchange or partition, in the purchase of land, and may hold such land, or any land acquired by way of exchange or partition, for the benefit of such charity, without any license in mortmain.

36. All orders of the board for the investment of money coming to any charity, or the trustees thereof, on any sale, exchange, or partition, shall be carried into effect by the trustees or persons administering the charity; and all monies which the board shall order to be provided out of any income or property of a charity for the payment of the costs of any such transaction shall be provided or raised by the trustees or administrators of the charity, and applied accordingly.

37. It shall be lawful for the board to authorise or order and direct the official trustees of charity lands and the official trustees of charitable funds respectively to convey lands, and to assign, transfer, and pay over stocks, funds monies, and securities, as the board shall think expedient.

38. All leases, sales, exchanges, partitions, and transactions authorised by the board under the principal act or this act shall be valid and effectual, notwithstanding the act of the 13 Eliz. c. 10, the acts of the 14 Eliz. cc. 11, 14, the acts of the 18 Eliz. cc. 6, 11, the act of the 39 Eliz. c. 5, and the act of the 21 Jac. 1, c. 1, or any disabling act applicable to the charity the estates whereof shall be the subject of any such transaction.

39. It shall be lawful for the board to prepare, and under their seal to approve of, any scheme for the letting of the property or any part of the property of any charity; and all leases granted by any trustees or persons acting in the management of any charity, pursuant to or in conformity with such scheme, shall be valid.

40. The board may order the bill of costs or charges claimed by any attorney or solicitor on account of business conducted or transacted by him on behalf of any charity, or the trustees thereof, to be examined and taxed by the taxing masters of the Court of Chancery, or by the proper taxing officers of any of the superior courts at Westminster, who shall proceed to examine and tax the same bill accordingly; and if the same shall be reduced upon such taxation by the amount of one-sixth part or more of the amount thereof, the costs of the taxation shall be paid by such attorney or solicitor, but otherwise out of the funds of the charity by the trustees thereof; and the board may, after being satisfied as to any bill that it contains exorbitant charges, order any such bill to be so taxed, notwithstanding that the same may have been paid by the trustees of the charity at any period not more than six calendar months previously to such order; and any amount taxed off any such paid bill shall be a debt due from the attorney or solicitor to the trustees of the charity, and shall be forthwith paid by him to such trustees accordingly.

41. Sect. 27 of the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, shall be construed and operate as if the words "and the trustees of the charity shall be legally authorised to purchase and hold such land" had been omitted therefrom; and incorporated trustees of any charity shall be competent to purchase and hold lands for the purposes mentioned in the same section without license in mortmain.

42. Any deed, will, or document relating to any charity may be enrolled by the board in books to be provided and kept by them for that purpose at their office, and a copy of any such deed, will, or document made from such books, and certified under the hand of the secretary or one of the commissioners, shall be received as evidence of the contents of the same deed, will, or document.

43. The 55th and 59th sections of the principal act shall be construed and operate as if the words "the office of the board" had been inserted therein in the place of the words "the office in London of the registrar of county courts judgments."

44. Sect. 61 of the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, except so much thereof as enacts that the trustees or persons acting in the administration of every charity shall, in books to be kept by them for that purpose, regularly enter or cause to be entered full and true accounts of all money received and paid respectively on account of such charity, shall be repealed as to all accounts which such trustees or administrators shall not have been bound to render before the passing of this act; and the trustees or administrators of every charity shall, on or before the 25th March, 1856, prepare and make out and transmit to the board an account of the endowments then belonging to the charity, shewing in the case of realty not in hand the manner in which the same is let or occupied, and in the case of personality the existing investment or employment thereof, and in what names such investments are made; and such trustees or administrators shall also, on or before the 25th March next, after the acquisition of any endowment not included in the foregoing account, prepare and make out in like manner, and transmit to the board, a similar account of such last-mentioned endowment, and in case of any alienation, or charge, or transfer of any real or personal estate of the charity, shall, on or before the 25th March then next following, transmit to the board an account of such alienation, charge, or transfer; and such trustees or administrators shall also, on or before the 25th March in every year, or such other day as may be fixed for that purpose by the board, or as may have been already fixed for rendering the accounts thereof required by the principal act, prepare and make out the following accounts in relation thereto; that is to say,

- (1). An account of the gross income arising from the endowment, or which ought to have arisen therefrom, during the year ending on the 31st December then last, or on such other day as may have been appointed for this purpose by the board;
- (2). An account of all balances in hand at the commencement of the year, and of all monies received during the same year on account of the charity;
- (3). An account for the same period of all payments;
- (4). An account of all monies owing to or from the charity, so far as conveniently may be;

Which accounts shall be certified under the hand of one or more of the said trustees or administrators, and shall be audited by the auditor of the charity, if any; and the said trustees or administrators shall, within fourteen days after the day appointed for making out such accounts, deliver or transmit a copy thereof to the commissioners at their office in London, and in the case of parochial charities shall deliver another copy thereof to the churchwarden or churchwardens of the parish or parishes with which the objects of such charities are identified, who shall present the same at the next general meeting of the vestry of such parishes, and insert a copy thereof in the minutes of the vestry book; and every such copy shall be open to the inspection of all persons at all reasonable hours, subject to such regulations as to the said board may seem fit; and any person may require a copy of every such account, or of any part thereof, on paying therefor after the rate of 2d. for every seventy-two words or figures.

45. The board may from time to time make such orders as they may think fit in relation to the delivery or transmission of the said accounts, and the forms of such accounts, and such orders shall be executed by all trustees and persons from whom the accounts to which they may relate are required.

46. The 64th section of the principal act shall apply as well to members of any charity within the operation of that act as to members of any charity exempted from the operation thereof.

47. Neither this act nor the principal act shall, until the 1st September, 1856, extend or be in any manner applied to charities or institutions the funds or income of which are applicable exclusively for the benefit of persons of the Roman Catholic persuasion, and which are under the superintendence and control of persons of that persuasion, nor shall anything in this act extend to any of the cases which by the 62nd section of the principal act are excepted from the operation thereof.

48. In the construction of the principal act and this act the word "charity" shall include every institution in England or Wales endowed for charitable purposes, but shall not include any charity or institution expressly exempted from the operation of the act of 1853, and words applying to any person or individual shall apply also to a corporation, whether sole or aggregate.

49. Nothing in this act or the principal act contained shall extend to the colleges of Eton and Winchester, or either of them.

50. This act may be cited as "The Charitable Trusts Amendment Act, 1855."

Be it enacted &c. as follows:—

SecT. 1. Where any person is charged before any justices of the peace assembled at such petty sessions as hereinafter provided with having committed simple larceny, and the value of the whole of the property alleged to have been stolen does not, in the judgment of such justices, exceed 5s., or with having attempted to commit larceny from the person, or simple larceny, it shall be lawful for such justices to hear and determine the charge in a summary way, and if the person charged shall confess the same, or if such justices, after hearing the whole case for the prosecution and for the defence, shall find the charge to be proved, then it shall be lawful for such justices to convict the person charged, and commit him to the common goal or house of correction, there to be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for any period not exceeding three calendar months; and if they find the offence not proved they shall dismiss the charge, and make out and deliver to the person charged a certificate under their hands, stating the fact of such dismissal; and every such conviction and certificate respectively may be in the forms (A.) and (B.) in the schedule to this act, or to the like effect: provided always, that if the person charged do not consent to have the case heard and determined by such justices, or if it appear to such justices that the offence is one which, owing to a previous conviction of the person charged, is punishable by law with transportation or penal servitude, or if such justices be of opinion that the charge is, from any other circumstances, fit to be made the subject of prosecution by indictment, rather than to be disposed of summarily, such justices shall, instead of summarily adjudicating thereon, deal with the case in all respects as if this act had not been passed: provided also, that if upon the hearing of the charge such justices shall be of opinion that there are circumstances in the case which render it inexpedient to inflict any punishment, they shall have power to dismiss the person charged, without proceeding to a conviction.

2. Where the justices before whom any person is charged as aforesaid propose to dispose of the case summarily under the foregoing provisions, one of such justices, after the examinations of all the witnesses for the prosecution have been completed, and before calling upon the person charged for any statement which he may wish to make, shall state to such person the substance of the charge against him, and shall then say to him these words, or words to the like effect:—"Do you consent that the charge against you shall be tried by us, or do you desire that it shall be sent for trial by a jury at the sessions or assizes?" (as the case may be); and if the person charged shall consent to the charge being summarily tried and determined as aforesaid, then the justices shall reduce the charge into writing, and read the same to such person, and shall then ask him whether he is guilty or not of such charge; and if such person shall say that he is guilty, the justices shall then proceed to pass such sentence upon him as may by law be passed, subject to the provisions of this act in respect to such offence; but if the person charged shall say that he is not guilty, the justices shall then inquire of such person whether he has any defence to make to such charge; and if he shall state that he has a defence, the justices shall hear such defence, and then proceed to dispose of the case summarily.

3. Where any person is charged before any justices at such petty sessions as aforesaid with simple larceny, (the property alleged to have been stolen exceeding in value 5s.), or stealing from the person, or larceny as a clerk or servant, and the evidence, when the case on the part of the prosecution has been completed, is in the opinion of such justices sufficient to put the person charged on his trial for the offence with which he is charged, such justices, if the case appear to them to be one which may properly be disposed of in a summary way, and may be adequately punished by virtue of the powers of this act, shall reduce the charge into writing, and shall read it to the said person, and shall then ask him whether he is guilty or not of the charge; and if such person shall say that he is guilty, such justices shall thereupon cause a plea of guilty to be entered upon the proceedings, and shall convict him of such offence, and commit him to the common goal or house of correction, there to be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding six calendar months; and every such conviction may be in the form (C.) in the schedule to this act, or to the like effect: provided always, that the said justices, before they ask such person whether he is guilty or not, shall explain to him that he is not obliged to plead or answer before them at all, and that if he do not plead or answer before them he will be committed for trial in the usual course.

4. In every case of summary proceeding under this act the person accused shall be allowed to make his full answer and defence, and to have all witnesses examined and cross-examined by counsel or attorney.

5. Where any person is charged before any justice or justices with any offence mentioned in this act, and in the opinion of such justice or justices the case may be proper to be disposed of by justices in petty sessions under this act, the justice or justices before whom such person is so charged may, if he or they see fit, remand such person for further examination to the next petty sessions, in like manner in all respects as a justice or justices are authorised to remand a party accused under the act passed in the session holden in the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 21, or under the Petty Sessions Act, (Ireland), 1851, sect. 14.

6. If any person suffered to go at large, upon entering into such recognisance as the justice or justices are authorised under the last-mentioned act to take on the remand of a party accused, do not afterwards appear pursuant to such recognisance, then the justices before whom he ought to have appeared shall certify (under the hands of two of them) on the back of the recognisance, to the clerk of the peace of the county or place, the fact of such non-appearance, and such recognisance shall be proceeded upon in like manner as other recognisances, and such certificate shall be deemed sufficient prima facie evidence of such non-appearance.

7. The justices adjudicating under this act shall transmit the conviction, or a duplicate of a certificate of dismissal, with the written charge, the depositions of the witnesses for the prosecution and for the defence, and the statement of the accused, to the next court of general or quarter sessions for the county or place, there to be kept by the proper officer among the records of the court; and a copy of such conviction, or of such certificate of dismissal, certified by the proper officer of the court, or proved to be a true copy, shall be sufficient evidence to prove a conviction or dismissal for the offence mentioned therein in any legal proceeding whatever.

8. It shall be lawful for the justices by whom any person is convicted under this act to order restitution of the property stolen, taken, or obtained by false pretences, in those cases in which the court before whom the person convicted would have been tried but for this act may be by law authorised to order restitution.

10*. Every petty sessions for the purposes of this act shall be an open public court, and shall be the petty sessions holden for a petty sessional division; and a written or printed notice of the days and hours for holding such petty sessions shall be posted or affixed by the clerk to the justices of petty sessions upon the outside of some conspicuous part of the building or place where the same are held.

9*. The provisions of the act of the session holden in the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, shall not be construed as applying to any proceeding under this act.

11. Every conviction by justices in petty sessions under this act shall have the same effect as a conviction upon indictment for the same offence would have had, save that no conviction under this act shall be attended with any forfeiture.

12. Every person who obtains a certificate of dismissal or is convicted under this act shall be released from all further or other criminal proceedings for the same cause.

13. No conviction, sentence, or proceeding under this act shall be quashed for want of form; and no warrant of commitment upon a conviction shall be held void by reason of any defect therein, if it be therein alleged that the offender has been convicted, and there be a good and valid conviction to sustain the same.

14. Where any charge is summarily adjudicated upon under this act, or an offender is under this act convicted by justices in petty sessions upon a plea of "guilty," it shall be lawful for the justices by whom such charge has been adjudicated upon or offender convicted, upon the request of any person who has preferred the charge or appeared to prosecute or give evidence against the person charged, if such justices think fit so to do, to grant a certificate to such person of the amount of the compensation which such justices may deem reasonable for his expenses, trouble, and loss of time therein, subject nevertheless to the regulations made or to be made as hereinafter mentioned; and every such certificate shall, when granted in England, have the effect of an order of court for the payment of the expenses of a prosecution made under the act of the 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, and the acts amending the same, and when granted in Ireland shall have the effect of an order of court for the payment of the expenses of a prosecution made under the act of the 55 Geo. 3, c. 91, and the acts amending the same; and the amount mentioned in such certificate shall be paid in like manner as the money mentioned in such order of court; and all certificates to be granted under this act shall be subject to the like regulations made or to be made in relation thereto as the certificates mentioned in the said act of the 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, to be granted by examining magistrates, are or may be subject to under the act of the session holden in the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 55: provided also, that the amount of the fees payable to the clerks of the magistrates in petty sessions, in respect of any proceeding under this act, and of the fees payable to the clerks of the peace for filing the depositions, conviction, or certificate of dismissal aforesaid, and of all such expenses of apprehending the person charged, and detaining him in custody, and of such other expenses as are now by law payable when incurred before a commitment for trial, may be added to the certificate for compensation aforesaid, and paid in the like manner.

15. In every city, borough, town, or place in England where any petty sessions shall be holden under this act, the town-hall, court-house, or other public building therein belonging to any county, city, borough, town, or place, or any court-house in such city, borough, town, or place provided by the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, under the act of the session holden in the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, may be used for the purpose of holding such petty sessions, without any charge for rent or other payment, save and except the reasonable and necessary charges for lighting, warming, and cleaning, when such public building is used for the purpose of holding such courts of petty sessions, and for all other expenses necessarily incidental to the use of the said building for the purposes of the said courts: provided always, that the necessary arrangements shall be made so that the sittings of the said courts of petty sessions shall not interfere with the business of the county, city, borough, town, or place, or other business usually transacted in such town-hall, court-house, or other public building, or any purpose for which any such town-hall, court-house, or other public building may be used by virtue of any act of Parliament in that behalf.

16. Any one of the magistrates appointed to act at any of the police courts of the metropolis, and sitting at a police court within the metropolitan police district, or any magistrate appointed to act at the police courts of the Dublin metropolitan district, and sitting at a police court within the said district, or any stipendiary magistrate appointed for any city, town, liberty, borough, or district, and sitting at a police court or other place appointed in that behalf, may, in the case of persons charged before such magistrate, do alone all acts by this act authorised to be done by justices of the peace in petty sessions, and all the provisions of this act referring to justices in petty sessions shall be read and construed as referring also to such magistrate.

17. Nothing in this act shall affect the provisions of the act of the session holden in the 10 & 11 Vict. c. 82, "for the more speedy Trial and Punishment of Juvenile Offenders," or of the act of the session holden in the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 37, "for the further Extension of Summary Jurisdiction in Cases of Larceny," or of the Summary Jurisdiction (Ireland) Act, 1851; and this act shall not extend to persons punishable under the said acts, so far as regards offences for which such persons may be punished thereunder.

18. And whereas the fees and emoluments of clerks of the peace for counties and boroughs, and of other officers of the courts of quarter sessions, in criminal proceedings, may be seriously diminished by the operation and effect of this act, and it is just and reasonable that full compensation for any such loss should be made in respect thereof to such clerks of the peace and other officers appointed before the passing of this act: be it enacted, that immediately after the passing of this act the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall, upon the application of any such clerk of the peace or other officer, by such means and in such manner as they may think proper, inquire into and ascertain the annual amount, to be computed upon an average of five years immediately preceding the passing of this act, or of such shorter period as such clerk of the peace or other officer shall have been in office, of the fees and emoluments in criminal prosecutions received by such clerk of the peace or other officer; and the said commissioners shall, upon the like application, also ascertain, in such manner as they may think proper, the total amount of fees and emoluments in criminal prosecutions received by such clerk of the peace or other officer during any year after the passing of this act; and the said commissioners are hereby authorised and empowered, by warrant under their hands, to award to such clerk of the peace or other officer the deficiency, when and so often as the same shall occur, between the last-mentioned amount and the annual average amount so ascertained as aforesaid, and the sum so awarded shall be paid out of any monies which may be provided by Parliament for that purpose; provided, that in all cases where any such clerk of the peace, by reason of his being paid by salary, under an order made by virtue of the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 55, shall pay such fees and emoluments as aforesaid to the treasurer of the county or borough for which he is clerk of the peace in aid of the county or borough rate, as the case may be, such deficiency, when so ascertained as aforesaid, shall be paid to the treasurer of such county or borough respectively.

19. And whereas, by sect. 9 of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 71, provision is made for payment, out of the monies in the hands of the receiver of the metropolitan police district, of such salaries as her Majesty shall direct, to the magistrates of the police courts of the metropolis, the salary to the chief magistrate not being more than 1200*l.*, and to each of the other magistrates not more than 1200*l.*: and whereas, after the passing of the said act, the salary of the chief magistrate was fixed at 1200*l.*, and the salaries of the other police magistrates at 1000*l.*: and whereas the duties of the said chief and other magistrates have increased, and are subject under this act to be further increased: and whereas the salaries of such other magistrates have, in consequence of such increase of duty, been increased from 1000*l.* to the limit permitted by the said act, and it is expedient to authorise such increase of the salary of the said chief magistrate as hereinafter mentioned; the salary to be paid out of the monies aforesaid to the said chief magistrate shall be such yearly sum, not exceeding 1500*l.*, as her Majesty may direct.

20. And whereas, by the act of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 73, certain powers were granted and provisions made for the payment to the several clerks of assize of annual sums for salaries, and for the expenses of their office, in respect of their duties as associates, in lieu of the fees and emoluments appertaining to those duties: and whereas it is expedient that the principle of payment by salary in lieu of fees should be further provided for, and that the clerks of assize should be so paid for the performance of all their other duties: be it therefore enacted, that all fees and emoluments heretofore payable to the clerks of assize for the performance of their duties as clerks of the Crown shall be and they are hereby abolished; and all the powers and provisions made by the before-mentioned act, except as is hereinafter provided, for the payment of clerks of assize by salary in lieu of fees, in respect of their duties as associates, shall be and the same are hereby extended and made applicable to the payment of clerks of assize by salary, and the expenses of their offices, in lieu of fees and emoluments, for the performance of their duties as clerks of the Crown, and of all other duties appertaining to the office of clerk of assize: provided always, that the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury for the time being shall fix and determine the amount of salary to be allowed to any subordinate officer now employed or who shall hereafter be employed by any clerk of assize, and shall be empowered to order the payment of such salary to the said officers in the first instance, and not through the medium of the clerk of assize: provided also, that the salaries and expenses of the officers of the said clerks of assize for the whole of their duties on the criminal and civil sides of the court shall be paid out of any monies which may be provided by Parliament for that purpose.

21. And whereas, by the acts of the 12 Rich. 2, c. 10, and 14 Rich. 2, c. 12, payments are provided for justices of the peace and their clerks in each county, as wages by the day for the time of their sessions, to be payable by the sheriff as therein mentioned, and in several counties in England sums are claimed from the sheriffs and paid in respect of such statutory wages, and it is expedient that such payments should be discontinued: be it therefore enacted, that so much of the several acts of the 12 Rich. 2, c. 10, and the 14 Rich. 2, c. 12, or of any other act now in force, as directs or authorises the payment of wages to justices of the peace and their clerks for the time of their sessions, shall be repealed.

22. And whereas it is expedient to amend the law as to witnesses in cases of wilful or malicious injuries to property: he it further enacted, that in all cases where any justice or justices of the peace have or shall hereafter have power to order a sum of money to be forfeited and paid to the party aggrieved, as amends or compensation for any injury to property, real or personal, the right of such party to receive the money so ordered to be paid shall not be affected by such party having been examined as a witness in proof of the offence, any law or statute to the contrary notwithstanding.

23. In the interpretation of this act "county" shall be construed to include riding, parts, liberty, and division of a county; "borough" to include city, county of a city or town, and town corporate; "property" to include everything included under the words "chattel, money, or valuable security," as used in the act of the session holden in the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29; and in the case of any "valuable security," the value of the share, interest, or deposit to which the security may relate, or of the money due thereon or secured thereby, and remaining unsatisfied, or of the goods or other valuable thing mentioned in the warrant or order, shall be deemed to be the value of such security.

24. This act shall not extend to Scotland.

Whereas an act was passed in the session of Parliament holden in the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 85, "to amend the Laws concerning the Burial of the Dead in the Metropolis;" and an act was passed in the session of Parliament holden in the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 134, "to amend the Laws concerning the Burial of the Dead in England beyond the Limits of the Metropolis, and to amend the Act concerning the Burial of the Dead in the Metropolis;" and an act was passed in the last session of Parliament, the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 87, "to make further Provisions for the Burial of the Dead in England beyond the Limits of the Metropolis;" and whereas it is expedient that further provision should be made for the burial of the dead, and that the said acts should be amended: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. It shall be lawful for her Majesty, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, from time to time to postpone the time appointed by any Order in Council for the discontinuance of burials, or otherwise to vary any Order in Council made under any of the said recited acts or this act, (whether the time thereby appointed for the discontinuance of burials thereunder, or other operation of such order, shall or shall not have arrived), as to her Majesty, with such advice as aforesaid, may seem fit; and every order of her Majesty in Council made before the passing of this act for varying any order previously made under the said acts, or any of them, shall be deemed valid and effectual in law.

2. If any person, after the time mentioned in any Order in Council under the said acts, or any of them, or this act, for the discontinuance of burials, shall knowingly and wilfully bury any body, or in anywise act or assist in the burial of any body, in any church, chapel, churchyard, burial ground, or place of burial, or (as the case may be) within the limits in which burials have by such orders been ordered to be discontinued, in violation of the provisions of any such order, every person so offending shall, upon summary conviction before two justices of the peace, forfeit a sum not exceeding 10l.

3. The churchwardens or other persons to whom it belongs to convene meetings of the vestry of any parish in which no burial board has been appointed may at any time, at their discretion, without requisition of ratepayers for that purpose, convene a meeting of such vestry for the purpose of determining whether a burial ground shall be provided for the parish; and where any Order in Council has been made before the passing of this act for discontinuing burials (wholly, or subject to any exception or qualification) in any burial ground of any parish for which no burial board has been appointed, or notice has been given of the intention of the Secretary of State to make a representation to her Majesty in Council that burials should be discontinued (wholly, or subject to any exception or qualification) in any burial ground of any parish, the churchwardens, or other persons to whom it belongs to convene meetings of vestry, shall, with all convenient speed after the passing of this act, convene a meeting of the vestry for the purpose aforesaid; and where at any time hereafter notice is given of the intention of the Secretary of State to make a like representation in relation to a burial ground of any parish, such churchwardens or other persons as aforesaid shall forthwith convene a meeting of the vestry for the purpose aforesaid; and all the provisions of the said acts, as amended by this act, relating to and consequent upon vestry meetings convened upon such requisition as provided by the first-recited act, shall be applicable to vestry meetings convened under this enactment.

4. Every vacancy in any burial board shall be filled up by the vestry appointing the same within one month after such vacancy shall have happened, and immediately on the occurrence thereof the same shall be notified by the burial board to the churchwardens or other persons to whom it belongs to convene meetings of the vestry; and in case any such vestry shall neglect to fill up any such vacancy, the vacancy may be filled up by the burial board at any meeting thereof; and every person to be appointed to supply any such vacancy shall be a ratepayer of the parish for which the burial board is appointed; and every such board may act for any purpose, notwithstanding any vacancies therein.

5. So much of sect. 13 of the said 15 & 16 Vict. [c. 85], as requires that the burial board shall meet once at least in every month shall be repealed.

6. If the vestry of any parish shall refuse or neglect to authorise the expenditure of such sums as the burial board of such parish shall have declared to be necessary for providing and laying out a burial ground, and building the necessary chapel or chapels therein, it shall be lawful for such burial board to represent such refusal or neglect to one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State; and in case it shall appear to the Secretary of State, after inquiry into the circumstances of the case, that the burial board are unable to provide such burial ground, or to proceed effectually in the execution of their duties, by reason of such refusal or neglect, it shall be lawful for such Secretary of State, by warrant under his hand, to authorise such burial board, without further authority, sanction, or approval of or by such vestry, to expend such sums of money for providing and laying out a burial ground, and building the necessary chapel or chapels thereon, and to borrow and charge such money for all or any of such purposes, and to enter into and make such contracts and purchases, and do such other acts as under sects. 19, 20, 26, and 42 of the said 15 & 16 Vict. [c. 85], might have been expended, borrowed, and charged, entered into, made, and done with the authority, approval, and sanction of such vestry, subject nevertheless to such limitation of amount, or other limitation or restriction, as such Secretary of State may by his warrant prescribe; and all acts done in pursuance of such warrant shall be as valid and effectual as if the authority, approval, and sanction of such vestry had in every case been obtained.

7. All such fees, payments, and sums as may be fixed, settled, and received by any burial board under sect. 34 of the said 15 & 16 Vict. [c. 85], shall be so fixed and settled subject to the approval of one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State; and no such fees, payments, or sums shall be altered or varied without such approval.

8. It shall be lawful for one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State from time to time to appoint and authorise any person to inspect any burial ground or cemetery, parochial or non-parochial, or place for the reception of bodies, to ascertain the state and condition thereof, and where regulations in relation thereto have been made or may be made by the Secretary of State under the said acts or any of them, to ascertain whether such regulations have been observed and complied with; and if any person having the care of any such burial ground, or cemetery, or other place, shall obstruct any person so authorised to inspect the same, or if any person having the care of any burial ground or place for the reception of bodies, subject to such regulations as aforesaid, shall violate or neglect or fail to observe and comply with any such regulation, or any regulation imposed by this act, every person so offending shall, upon summary conviction thereof before two justices, forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding 10l.

9. So much of the said act of the 15 & 16 Vict. [c. 85], as enacts that "no ground (not already used as or appropriated for a cemetery) shall be appropriated as a burial ground, or as an addition to a burial ground, under that act, nearer than 200 yards to any dwelling-house, without the consent in writing of the owner, leasee, and occupier of such dwelling-house," shall be repealed; but no ground not already used as or appropriated for a cemetery shall be used for burials under the said act or this act, or either of them, within the distance of 100 yards from any dwelling-house, without such consent as aforesaid.

10. If the ratepayers assembled at any vestry duly convened under the provisions of this act shall, in pursuance of public notice duly given in that behalf, resolve unanimously that any new burial ground to be provided for their parish, under the provisions of this act, shall be held and used in like manner, and subject to the same laws and regulations in all respects, as the existing burial ground or churchyard of the said parish, the land for such new burial ground may be conveyed and settled in accordance with such resolution, anything in this or the said recited acts notwithstanding, and in such case it shall not be necessary to set apart, to remain unconsecrated, any portion of the land so conveyed and settled: provided always, that if at any time within ten years thereafter the vestry, duly convened under the provisions of this act in pursuance of public notice duly given in that behalf, should determine that an unconsecrated burial ground should be also provided for such parish, all the powers and provisions of the said recited acts and this act may be put in force, and shall be applicable for providing such unconsecrated burial ground separately, in like manner as they might have been put in force and been applicable for providing an ordinary burial ground for such parish.

11. Where a parish or place has been united with any other parish or place, parishes or places, for all or any ecclesiastical purposes, or where two or more parishes or places have heretofore had a church or a burial ground for their joint use, or where the inhabitants of several parishes or places have been accustomed to meet in one vestry for purposes common to such several parishes or places, it shall be lawful for the vestry, or any meeting in the nature of a vestry, of such several parishes or places in any of the cases aforesaid, and whether any one or more of such parishes or places do or do not separately maintain its own poor, to appoint a burial board, and from time to time to supply vacancies therein, and to exercise the same powers of authorisation, approval, and sanction in relation to such burial board, and such other powers, as under the said acts and this act are vested in the vestry of a parish or place separately maintaining its own poor; and the burial board so appointed shall have all the powers for providing a burial ground for the common use of such several parishes or places, and for facilitating interments, and otherwise, as if such several parishes or places had been a parish separately maintaining its own poor; and the expenses of the burial board appointed under this provision shall be borne by the several parishes or places for which such board is appointed, and shall be apportioned among them by such burial board in proportion to the value of the property in such several parishes or places as rated to the relief of the poor; and the sums required by the burial board in respect of the portion of such expenses to be borne by any such parish or place shall be paid out of the rates for the relief of the poor in such parish or place, in like manner as if such burial board had been appointed for such parish or place alone.

12. The vestry, or meeting in the nature of a vestry, of any parish, township, or other district not separately maintaining its own poor, which has heretofore had a separate burial ground, may appoint a burial board, and from time to time supply vacancies therein, and may exercise the same powers of authorisation, approval, and sanction in relation to such burial board, and such other powers, as under the said acts and this act are vested in the vestry of a parish separately maintaining its own poor; and the burial board so appointed shall have all the powers for providing a burial ground and otherwise as if such parish, township, or other district had been a parish separately maintaining its own poor.

13. Where any district (whether a parish or township or other subdivision) not separately maintaining its own poor, but forming part of a parish maintaining its own poor, or of an incorporation or other union maintaining the poor of the places comprised therein, by means of a common rate, shall have a burial board, or shall form part of a place or union of places not co-extensive with the area rated for the relief of the poor, and having one burial board, it shall be lawful for such respective burial board to issue their certificate to the overseers of such parish, or the overseers or other persons authorised to make and collect or caused to be collected such common rate, as the case may be, for payment of the sums required for the expenses of such burial board, or, where such district not separately maintaining its own poor forms part only of the area of the burial board, of the sums required in respect of the portion of such expenses to be borne by such district, in like manner as if such district had been a parish separately maintaining its own poor, and such overseers or persons authorised as aforesaid had been the overseers thereof; and such overseers or persons shall pay such sums as shall be required by such certificate, according to the directions of such burial board, and shall levy such sums as may be required for such payments to the burial board by an addition to the parish rate or common rate, so far as the same affects the district in respect of which such payments are required, or by separate rates to be made from time to time on such district; and for levying such additions or separate rates as aforesaid, such overseers or other persons shall have the powers, remedies, and privileges, and proceed in the same manner, as in the case of the rates for the relief of the poor: provided that any such rates may, notwithstanding any restriction in relation to the parish rate or common rate, be made and levied at such times as may be necessary to provide for the payments aforesaid.

14. And whereas doubts have arisen whether in all cases in which any burial board shall build in any burial ground provided by such board a chapel for the burial service according to the rites of the United Church of England and Ireland, such burial board is not also bound by law to build a chapel or chapels upon the unconsecrated part of such burial ground for the performance of burial service for persons not being members of the said church: be it enacted, that in any such case as aforesaid, where it shall appear to one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, upon the representation of a majority of the vestry of any parish, consisting of not less than three-fourths of the members of the same, that the building of a chapel upon the unconsecrated part of any such burial ground for the use of persons not being members of the said church is undesirable and unnecessary, it shall be lawful for the said Secretary of State, if he shall think fit, to signify his opinion to that effect to the burial board of the parish, and the said burial board shall thereupon be relieved from all obligation to build the same: provided always, that such Secretary of State shall not signify his opinion as aforesaid unless it be shewn to his satisfaction that notice of the intention to propose to such vestry to make such representation was given in manner required by law for notices of vestry meetings, and of the special purposes thereof.

15. No land already or to be hereafter purchased or acquired, under the provisions of any of the acts hereinbefore recited, for the purpose of a burial ground, (with or without any building erected or to be erected thereon), shall, while used for such purposes, be assessed to any county, parochial, or other local rates at a higher value or more improved rent than the value or rent at which the same was assessed at the time of such purchase or acquisition.

16. That in any case where the burial boards appointed under the said recited acts of the 15 & 16 Vict. [c. 85], and the 16 & 17 Vict. [c. 134], or either of them, for any two parishes, shall provide separate burial grounds for such parishes respectively, and such burial grounds shall adjoin each other, it shall be lawful for the said burial boards to concur in building, either on one of the said burial grounds, or partly on one of such grounds and partly on the other, such chapels as are authorised to be built by the said acts, and that such chapels when erected shall be used in common by both of such parishes, and be deemed and taken to be the chapels of and belonging to each of such burial grounds respectively, in such manner, consistent with the provisions of the said acts or either of them, as the said burial boards shall mutually agree upon; and that the said burial boards may agree as to the proportions in which the expenses of erecting such chapel accommodation shall be borne by each of the said boards respectively; and the proportion for each of such parishes of such expenses shall be chargeable upon and paid in the same manner as the costs of providing burial grounds under the said acts; and where any burial board shall provide a burial ground, and cause chapels to be built thereon, pursuant to the said recited acts, it shall be lawful for such burial board, with the sanction of one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, to contract with any other burial board whose burial ground shall adjoin the one on which such chapels shall so have been built, for the use of such chapels, in such manner and on such terms as such respective burial boards shall mutually agree, and that during the existence of any such agreement such chapels shall be deemed and taken to be the chapels of and belonging to each of such burial grounds respectively.

17. It shall be lawful for any burial board, with the sanction of one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, and subject to regulations approved of by him, to let any land purchased by and vested in them under this act, or any of the acts hereinbefore recited, and which has not been consecrated, and in which no body has been at any time interred, and which is not for the time being required for the purposes of a burial ground, in such manner and on such terms as such board may see fit, but so nevertheless that power shall be reserved to such board to resume any such land which may be required for the purposes aforesaid upon giving six months' notice.

18. In every case in which any Order in Council has been or shall hereafter be issued for the discontinuance of burials in any churchyard or burial ground, the burial board or churchwardens, as the case may be, shall maintain such churchyard or burial ground of any parish in decent order, and also do the necessary repair of the walls and other fences thereof, and the costs and expenses shall be repaid by the overseers, upon the certificate of the burial board or churchwardens, as the case may be, out of the rate made for the relief of the poor of the parish or place in which such churchyard or burial ground is situate, unless there shall be some other fund legally chargeable with such costs and expenses.

19. Nothing in this act contained shall in anywise abridge, lessen, or defeat any power, right, or privilege of any local board of health, being the burial board of a borough created or to exist under or by virtue of any local act of Parliament.

20. Any local board of health acting as or created a board under or by virtue of the powers of any local act of Parliament shall and may have and exercise all the powers, rights, and privileges which by this act or by the secondly-recited act are or can or may be had, enjoyed, or exercised by any burial board therein named.

21. The said acts of the 15 & 16 Vict., 16 & 17 Vict., and 17 & 18 Vict., and this act shall be read and construed together as one act.

Where any grant hath been made or shall hereafter be made out of any sums of money heretofore granted or hereafter to be granted by Parliament for the purposes of education in Great Britain, under the advice of any Committee of the Council on Education for the time being, to the trustees, managers, or other persons applying on behalf of any school, with the consent of the trustees or persons holding the legal estate thereof, for or towards the purchase of the site or the erection, enlargement, or repair of the school, or the residence of the master or mistress, or the furnishing such school or residence, no sale, exchange, or mortgage of the premises in respect of which such grant hath been or may hereafter be made, in exercise of any power contained in the conveyance or other deed relating thereto, or under any other legal authority, shall be valid unless either the consent of the Secretary of State for the Home Department for the time being, in writing under his hand, be given to the same, or the amount of the grant which shall have been made as aforesaid shall be repaid to the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury for the time being; and whenever any grant as aforesaid shall be hereafter made, a memorandum, to be signed by one of the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury for the time being, shall be indorsed upon some one of the title deeds relating to the school, certifying to the 17. Extent of act.

Whereas it is expedient that facilities should be afforded for the erection of healthful and commodious dwellings for the labouring classes: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. This act may for all purposes be cited as "The Labourers' Dwellings Act, 1855."

Constitution of Company.

2. Any number of persons not less than six may, by subscribing articles of association, or a schedule thereto, form themselves into a company for the purposes hereinafter mentioned: the articles shall be in the form set forth in the schedule hereto, or as near thereto as circumstances permit: there shall be set opposite to the name of each subscriber the sum subscribed for by him in the capital of the company, and his subscription shall be deemed to imply a covenant on the part of himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, to pay to the company the amount so subscribed for.

3. The articles shall be registered by the registrar of joint-stock companies, who shall charge in respect of such registration such fees as may from time to time be directed by the Lords of the Committee of Privy Council appointed for the consideration of matters relating to trade and plantations, hereinafter called the Board of Trade; and upon such registration being made, the subscribers, together with such other persons as may from time to time become members of the company, shall be a body corporate by the name prescribed in the articles of association, having a perpetual succession and a common seal; but no such registration shall be made until it is proved to the satisfaction of the said registrar that three-fourths of the proposed capital has been subscribed for, and that 10% per cent. upon such capital has been paid up.

4. The said registrar shall grant a certificate stating the date of the incorporation of the company, and such certificate shall in all cases be prima facie evidence of the fact of such incorporation.

5. The Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, shall be incorporated into and form part of this act, with the exception of the provisions relating to the recovery of damages, and to the provision to be made for affording access to the special act; and in the construction of the said Companies Clauses

Act the articles of association shall be deemed to be the special act, and the date of the incorporation of the company, as certified in manner aforesaid, shall be deemed to be "the time of the passing of the special act;" and whenever the term "prescribed" is used in this or in the said incorporated act, it shall mean "prescribed by the articles of association."

Rights and Obligations of Company.

6. Every company incorporated under this act, and hereinafter referred to as "the company," shall be established for the purpose of providing dwellings for the labouring classes, with or without private gardens, or with or without common gardens or places of common recreation for the use of the inmates of such dwellings, and for no other purpose whatever; and for the above purpose the company shall have power to accept grants and leases of and to purchase and hold land, to erect thereon dwellings for the labouring classes, and to let such dwellings to lodgers by the week or month, or to demise the same to lessees for any estate or interest not greater than a term of twenty-one years, upon such terms of remuneration as they think fit; subject to this proviso, that the company shall not be entitled to hold at any one time more than ten acres of land, except with the license of the Committee of Privy Council for Trade.

7. The following regulations shall be made respecting any dwellings provided by the company; that is to say,

- (1). All such dwellings shall, as respects drainage, ventilation, supply of water, and necessary conveniences, be constructed and provided in such manner as may be approved by the General Board of Health, and shall be maintained by the company in good and sufficient repair;
- (2). Any person appointed by the General Board of Health may at all reasonable times inspect any such dwellings as aforesaid.

8. The following matters and things may be prescribed by the articles of association, and if so prescribed, but not otherwise, shall be binding; that is to say,

- (1). That the capital of the company may, with the approval of the Board of Trade, and subject to such condition as they may impose, be increased by the issue of a prescribed number of shares, and of a prescribed amount;
- (2). That no premium is to be taken in respect of any lease granted by the company;
- (3). That the interest granted to any lessee is not to exceed the prescribed term, such term being less than twenty-one years;
- (4). That the interest of a lessee is not to be disposed of without the consent of the directors;

But no power hereby given shall be exercised in such manner as to prejudice any right under any subsisting lease, or contract for a lease.

9. In cases where it is prescribed by the articles of association that the dwellings belonging to the company are to be let only to lodgers by the week or month, and not for any greater interval, the company may, as soon as half the subscribed capital is paid up, borrow on the security of their property to the prescribed amount, such amount not to exceed one-third of such subscribed capital; but no mortgages shall have power to eject any tenant before the expiration of his tenancy; and in no other case shall the company have power to borrow money.

10. The following rules shall be observed with respect to demises and letting made by the company:—

- (1). The dwellings provided by the company, with the private gardens (if any) appurtenant thereto, shall be divided into such parcels as may be conveniently held in distinct occupations;
- (2). The parcels shall be numbered in arithmetical progression, beginning with the figure one, each parcel being distinguished by a separate number;
- (3). The interests of the lessees, other than monthly or weekly tenants, in the property of the company, shall be deemed to be shares in a capital consisting of the dwelling-houses of the company, with their appurtenances; and in all cases where such interests are not restricted to the original lessee, the transfer or transmission of such interests shall take place in manner in which the transfer or transmission of shares takes place in pursuance of the said Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, or as near thereto as circumstances admit; and the clauses of such last-mentioned act with respect to the transfer or transmission of shares shall, with the necessary alterations, be held to apply to the transfer or transmission of the interests of any such lessees as aforesaid.

11. The company may purchase the interest of any registered lessee, and upon such purchase being made such interest shall be deemed to be extinguished, and the company may demise the premises so purchased in the same manner as if no previous lease thereof had ever before been made.

12. If any funds of the company are advanced to any person by way of loan, or are, with a view of gaining profit, appropriated to any purpose other than the purpose for which the company is hereby declared to be established, every director of the company shall, in addition to any other liabilities he may be under to replace any such funds, be liable, at the suit of any shareholder or other person, whether implicated or not in such loan or misappropriation, to pay to such shareholder or other person, to be applied by him to his own use, in respect of each such advance or misappropriation, a sum by way of penalty not greater in amount than the sum so advanced or misappropriated, and not less than half such sum.

13. If any dwelling belonging to the company is insufficiently drained or ventilated, or insufficiently supplied with water or necessary conveniences, or is in a bad state of repair, the General Board of Health may, by order left at any office of the company, or served on any director of the company, require the company, within a reasonable time, to be specified in such order, sufficiently to drain, ventilate, and supply with water and necessary conveniences, or put in a good state of repair, such dwelling; and if default is made in compliance with the requisitions of such notice, the company shall incur a penalty not exceeding 5*l.* for every day during which such default continues; and it shall be lawful for any justices by whom such penalty is imposed, if they think fit, to order the whole or any part thereof to be laid out in executing the works in respect of which the penalty is incurred; and in addition to the above remedy the said General Board may themselves do the works required by such notice, and recover from the company in a summary manner the expenses of so doing the same; but any order made by the General Board in pursuance of this section may be appealed against, and, on application by motion, be set aside or otherwise modified by any of her Majesty's superior courts of law at Westminster.

14. If any person obstructs any inspector of the General Board of Health in the inspection of any dwelling belonging to the company, he shall for each offence incur a penalty not exceeding 5*l.*

Miscellaneous.

15. The provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, with reference to the purchase of lands by agreement, shall be incorporated with this act, and shall apply to the purchase of land by the company in pursuance of this act.

16. All penalties imposed by this act, or by any bye-laws made in pursuance of this act or of any act incorporated herewith, and all sums of money hereby directed to be recovered in a summary manner, may be recovered in a summary manner before two justices, as directed by an act passed in the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, intitled "An Act to facilitate the Performance of the Duties of Justices of the Peace out of Sessions within England and Wales with respect to summary Convictions and Orders."

Whereas it is expedient to enable members of joint-stock companies to limit the liability for the debts and engagements of such companies to which they are now subject: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. Any joint-stock company to be formed under the act of the 8 Vict. c. 110, (other than an assurance company), with a capital to be divided into shares of a nominal value not less than 10*l.* each, may obtain a certificate of complete registration with limited liability upon complying with the conditions following, in addition to doing all other matters and things now required in order to obtain a certificate of complete registration; that is to say,

- (1). The promoters shall state on their returns to the office for provisional registration that such company is proposed to be formed with limited liability:
- (2). The word "limited" shall be the last word of the name of the company:
- (3). The deed of settlement shall contain a statement to the effect that the company is formed with limited liability:
- (4). The deed of settlement shall be executed by shareholders, not less than twenty-five in number, holding shares to the amount, in the aggregate, of at least three-fourths of the nominal capital of the company, and there shall have been paid up by each of such shareholders, on account of his shares, not less than 20*l.* per centum:
- (5). The payment of the above per-centage shall be acknowledged in or indorsed on the deed of settlement, and the fact of the same having been bona fide so paid shall be verified by a declaration of the promoters, or any two of them, made in pursuance of the act made in the 6 Will. 4, c. 62:

And upon such conditions being complied with, and such other matters and things done, the registrar of joint-stock companies shall grant a certificate of complete registration with limited liability to such company.

2. Any joint-stock company, except as aforesaid, now or hereafter completely registered under the said act of the 8 Vict. [c. 110], may obtain a certificate of complete registration with limited liability, in manner and subject to the condition following; that is to say,

The directors of such company may, with the consent of at least three-fourths in number and value of its shareholders who may be present, personally or by proxy, at any general meeting summoned for that purpose, make such alteration in the name, nominal value of shares, and deed of settlement of the company as may be necessary for enabling it to comply with the conditions hereinbefore mentioned with respect to joint-stock companies seeking to obtain certificates of complete registration with limited liability; and upon compliance with such conditions, the registrar, after the affairs of the company shall at the expense of the company have been audited by some person appointed by the Board of Trade, and on certificate from the said board that the complete solvency thereof has been established on such audit to its satisfaction, shall grant to such company, by its new name, a certificate of complete registration with limited liability; and thereupon all privileges and obligations hereby attached to companies with limited liability, their shareholders, directors, and officers, shall attach to the company named in such certificate, its shareholders, directors, and officers.

3. Any joint-stock company, except as aforesaid, constituted under any private act of Parliament, whereof it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the Board of Trade, after the affairs of the company shall at the expense of the company have been audited by some person appointed by the Board of Trade, that the said company is perfectly solvent, and that not less than 20*l.* per centum of three-fourths of the nominal capital of such company has been paid up, may obtain a certificate of complete registration with limited liability, in manner and subject to the condition following; that is to say,

The directors of such company may, with the consent of at least three-fourths in number and value of its shareholders who may be present, personally or by proxy, at any general meeting summoned for that purpose, make such alteration in the name and nominal value of shares as may be necessary for enabling it to comply with the condition in that behalf hereinbefore mentioned with respect to joint-stock companies seeking to obtain certificates of complete registration with limited liability; and upon compliance with such condition, the registrar, on receipt of a certificate of the solvency of the company, and of the payment of capital as before mentioned, shall grant to such company, by its new name, a certificate of complete registration with limited liability; and thereupon all privileges and obligations hereby attached to companies with limited liability, their shareholders, directors, and officers, shall attach to the company named in such certificate, its shareholders, directors, and officers.

4. Every company that has obtained a certificate of complete registration with limited liability shall paint or affix, and shall keep painted or affixed, its name on the outside of every office or place in which the business of the company is carried on, in a conspicuous position, in letters easily legible, and shall have its name engraven in legible characters on its seal, and shall have its name mentioned in legible characters in all notices, advertisements, and other official publications of such company, and in all bills of exchange, promissory notes, cheques, orders for money, bills of parcels, invoices, receipts, letters, and other writings used in the transaction of the business of the company.

5. If such company do not paint or affix, and keep painted or affixed, its name in the manner aforesaid, each of the directors thereof shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding 5*l.* for not so painting or affixing its name, and for every day during which such name is not so kept painted or affixed; and if any director or other officer of the company, or any person on its behalf, use any seal purporting to be a seal of the company whereon its name is not so engraven as aforesaid, or issue or authorise the issue of any notice, advertisement, or other official publication of such company, or of any bill of exchange, promissory note, cheque, order for money, bill of parcels, invoice, receipt, letter, and other writing used in the transaction of the business of the company, wherein its name is not mentioned in the manner aforesaid, he shall be liable to a penalty of 50*l.*, and shall further be personally liable to the holder of any such bill of exchange, promissory note, cheque, or order for money, for the amount thereof, unless the same shall be duly paid by the company.

6. No increase to be made in the nominal capital of any company that has obtained a certificate of complete registration with limited liability shall be advertised or otherwise treated as part of the capital of such company until it has been registered with the registrar of joint-stock companies; and no such registration shall be made unless a deed is produced to the registrar, executed by shareholders holding shares of the nominal value of not less than 10*l.* to the amount in the aggregate of at least three-fourths of the proposed increased capital of the company, nor unless it is proved to the registrar, by such acknowledgment and declaration as hereinafter mentioned, that upon each of such shares there has been paid up by the holder thereof an amount of not less than 20*l.* per centum; and if any such increase of capital as aforesaid be advertised or otherwise treated as part of the capital of the company before the same has been so registered, every director of such company shall incur a penalty of 50*l.*; and the payment of the above per-centage shall be acknowledged in or indorsed on the deed so produced, and the fact of the same having been bona fide so paid shall be verified by a declaration of the directors, or any two of them, made in pursuance of the said act made in the 6 Will. 4, c. 62.

7. The members of a joint-stock company which has so obtained a certificate of complete registration with limited liability, after such certificate is granted, notwithstanding the provisions contained in the said act of the 8 Vict. [c. 110], shall not be liable under any judgment, decree, or order which shall be obtained against such company, or for any debt or engagement of such company, further or otherwise than is hereinafter provided.

8. If any execution, sequestration, or other process in the nature of execution, either at law or in equity, shall have been issued against the property or effects of the company, and if there cannot be found sufficient whereon to levy or enforce such execution, sequestration, or other process, then such execution, sequestration, or other process may be issued against any of the shareholders to the extent of the portions of their shares respectively in the capital of the company not then paid up, but no shareholder shall be liable to pay, in satisfaction of any one or more such execution, sequestration, or other process, a greater sum than shall be equal to the portion of his shares not paid up: provided always, that no such execution shall issue against any shareholder except upon an order of the court, or of a judge of the court, in which the action, suit, or other proceeding shall have been brought or instituted, and such court or judge may order execution to issue accordingly, with the reasonable costs of such application and execution, to be taxed by a master of the said court; and for the purpose of ascertaining the names of the shareholders, and the amount of capital remaining to be paid upon their respective shares, it shall be lawful for any person entitled to any such execution, at all reasonable times, to inspect the register of shareholders without fee.

9. If the directors of any such company shall declare and pay any dividend when the company is known by them to be insolvent, or any dividend the payment of which would to their knowledge render it insolvent, they shall be jointly and severally liable for all the debts of the company then existing, and for all that shall be thereafter contracted, so long as they shall respectively continue in office; provided that the amount for which they shall all be so liable shall not exceed the amount of such dividend; and that if any of the directors shall be absent at the time of making the dividend, or shall object thereto, and shall file their objection in writing with the clerk of the company, they shall be exempted from the said liability.

10. No note or obligation given by any shareholder to the company whereof he is a shareholder, whether secured by any pledge or otherwise, shall be considered as payment of any money due from him on any share held by him, and no loan of money shall be made by any such company to any shareholder therein; and if any such loan shall be made to a shareholder, the directors who shall make it, or who shall assent thereto, shall be jointly and severally liable to the extent of such loan and interest for all the debts of the company contracted before the repayment of the sum so lent.

11. Where any company completely registered under the said act of the 8 Vict. [c. 110], or any company constituted under any act of Parliament, shall obtain a certificate of complete registration with limited liability, the grant of such certificate shall not prejudice or affect any right which previously to the grant of such certificate has accrued to any creditor or other person against the company in its corporate capacity, or against any person then being or having been a member of such company, but every such creditor or other person shall be entitled to all such remedies against the company in its corporate capacity, and against every person then being or having been a member of such company, as he would have been entitled to in case such certificate had not been obtained.

12. No alteration made by virtue of this act in the name of any company shall prejudice or affect any right which previously to such alteration has accrued to such company as against any other company or person, or which has accrued to any other company or person as against such company, but every such company as against any other company or person, and every other company or person as against such company and the members thereof, shall be entitled to all such remedies as they or he would have been entitled to if no such alteration had been made; and no such alteration shall abate or render defective any legal proceeding pending at the time when such alteration is made.

13. In the case of any company which has obtained a certificate of limited liability, whenever, on taking the yearly accounts of such company, or by any report of the auditors thereof, it appears that three-fourths of the subscribed capital stock of the company has been lost, or has become unavailable in the course of trade, from the insolvency of shareholders, or from any other cause, the trading and business of such company shall forthwith cease, or shall be carried on for the sole purpose of winding up its affairs, and the directors of such company shall forthwith take proper steps for the dissolution of such company, and for the winding up of its affairs, either by petition to the Court of Chancery, or by exercise of the powers of the deed of settlement, or by such other lawful course as they may think most fit.

14. In cases where a certificate of registration with limited liability has been obtained, when one auditor only shall have been appointed under the 38th section of the 8 Vict. c. 110, that single auditor, and when two or more such auditors shall have been so appointed, then one of such auditors, shall be subject to the approval of the Board of Trade, and such board, in case the auditor submitted to them for approval shall for any reason appear unfit or objectionable, shall appoint another in his place.

15. Every pecuniary penalty imposed in pursuance of this act shall be deemed a debt due to the Crown, and shall be recoverable accordingly.

16. This act shall, so far as is consistent with the contents and subject-matter thereof, be taken as part of and construed with the said act of the 8 Vict. c. 110, and the 11 Vict. c. 78; and all the provisions of the said acts, save in so far as they are varied by this act, shall apply to persons and companies applying for or obtaining a certificate of complete registration with limited liability.

17. The provisions of the act of the 8 Vict. c. 111, and of the Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Act, 1848, and of the Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Amendment Act, 1849, shall apply to persons and companies obtaining a certificate of complete registration with limited liability, subject only to such variations as may be occasioned by the provisions of this act.

18. This act shall not apply to Scotland.

19. This act may be cited for all purposes as "The Limited Liability Act, 1855."

CAP. CXXXIV.

An Act to make further Provision for the more speedy and efficient Despatch of Business in the High Court of Chancery, and to vest in the Lord Chancellor the Ground and Buildings of the said Court situate in Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane, with Powers of leasing and Sale thereof.

[14th August, 1855.]

Whereas, for the prevention of delays and inconveniences in the carrying on of such portion of the business of the High Court of Chancery as is transacted by the Master of the Rolls and the Vice-Chancellors respectively sitting at chambers, it is requisite that an addition to the number of junior clerks attached to the courts of the said judges respectively should be forthwith made, and a further like addition may hereafter become necessary: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

1. It shall be lawful for the Master of the Rolls and every of the Vice-Chancellors to appoint forthwith after the passing of this act one additional junior clerk to each of their respective chief clerks, and for the Master of the Rolls and the Vice-

Chancellors for the time being respectively to fill up from time to time such vacancies as may occur in the respective offices of the junior clerks so appointed.

2. Such of the provisions contained in the sections numbered respectively 19, 20, 22, 23, 24, 44, and 45 of the act, intituled "An Act to abolish the Office of Master in Ordinary of the High Court of Chancery, and to make Provision for the more speedy and efficient Despatch of Business in the said Court," passed in the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80, as relate to the removal from office, striking off the rolls, tenure of office, attendances, duties, prohibitions, prosecutions, penalties and punishments, salaries and annuities, of and respecting the junior clerks by the same act authorised to be appointed, are hereby extended and applied to and in the case of the junior clerks to be appointed under this act.

3. Lord Chancellor may increase salaries of chief clerks.

4. Salaries of junior clerks may be apportioned among them.

5. The office of Master of Reports and Entries shall be and the same is hereby abolished from the first occurrence of a vacancy therein after the passing of this act, or from such other period before the occurrence of a vacancy as the Lord Chancellor, with the advice and assistance of the Master of the Rolls, may by order direct.

6. From and after the time when such abolition shall take effect, the business of the Report-office (except such part thereof as is transacted by the entering clerks) shall be conducted and carried on under the superintendence, direction, and control of the Clerks of Records and Writs, who shall thenceforth discharge all such duties relative to the Report-office as may then belong to the office of the Master of Reports and Entries, as far as the same may be from time to time necessary or proper to be discharged; and such part of the business of the Report-office as is transacted by the entering clerks shall be conducted and carried on by such entering clerks (who shall be thenceforth styled "the Entering Clerks to the Registrars") under the superintendence, direction, and control of the senior registrar for the time being, subject nevertheless, as to all and every part of the business now transacted in the Report-office, to such rules and regulations as the Lord Chancellor, with the advice and assistance of the Master of the Rolls, may from time to time think fit by order to make concerning the same.

7. The provision contained in sect. 29 of the act intituled "An Act for the Relief of the Suitors of the High Court of Chancery," passed in the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, directing that the duties of the Clerk of Reports (whose office was before by the same act abolished) should be performed by such person or persons as the Lord Chancellor should appoint for that purpose, and providing for his or their salary or salaries, shall be and the same is hereby repealed, without prejudice, nevertheless, to any appointment already made under the same provision.

8. The offices of the two clerks appointed under the last-mentioned provision to perform the duties of the Clerk of Reports shall be continued under this act, and upon any vacancy in either of those offices it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to fill up the vacancy; and if and when the Lord Chancellor, with the advice and assistance of the Master of the Rolls, shall deem the appointment of more than two persons to be requisite for the due performance of the duties of the Clerk of Reports, or otherwise for the due despatch of the business of the Report-office, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to appoint from time to time, in addition to such two clerks and their successors as aforesaid, so many clerks of and in the Report-office as occasion may require, and the Lord Chancellor, with the advice and assistance last aforesaid, may direct, and from time to time to fill up all or any of the vacancies which may occur in the offices of the clerks so appointed in addition as aforesaid.

9. Nothing in this act contained shall be taken to repeal or alter, as far as regards James Thomas Fry, the present Master of Reports and Entries, any of the provisions contained in the sections numbered respectively 34, 35, and 36 of the said act "for the Relief of the Suitors of the High Court of Chancery," relating to the countersigning by the Master of Reports and Entries of notes or cheques drawn by the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery upon the Bank of England, and the payment thereof by the same Bank, and directing that the Master of Reports and Entries should also perform all such duties (as well as the duties in the same act mentioned) as the Lord Chancellor should from time to time by any order direct, and the same provisions shall respectively continue in full force as far as regards the said James Thomas Fry, and the Lord Chancellor is hereby required to continue the said James Thomas Fry as an officer of the Court of Chancery for the performance of the duties hereinbefore mentioned, or such other duties as aforesaid, after and notwithstanding that the abolition of the said office may have taken effect under this act.

16. And whereas, by divers acts of Parliament, the Court of Chancery is empowered to make orders in respect of the disposition of trust funds, and other matters under its jurisdiction, upon petition presented or motion made in a summary way, without bill, but such orders cannot be made in respect of the same matters upon application at chambers: be it therefore enacted, that the business to be disposed of by the Master of the Rolls and the Vice-Chancellors respectively while sitting at chambers shall comprise such of the matters in respect of which the Court of Chancery is so as aforesaid empowered to make orders in a summary way, as the Lord Chancellor, with the advice and assistance of the Master of the Rolls and the Vice-Chancellors, or of any two of them, may by any General Order direct.
